Thread: Rate Thread Design \(Negative Space Experiment\)

mparks277 - January 1, 2016, 11:17 pm

Been about a half a year since I posted; learned a lot in my design/art classes so far this semester, and probably will learn more the next. I was experimenting with some negative space to help clear out any unnecessary elements to distract the viewer. Leave me a rating, cnc, or both.

mparks277 - January 2, 2016, 11:55 am

Thanks for the feedback, always open for improvements

Should be a bit wider in my opinion and subheading should be closer to heading Looks clean as fuck actually. Good job.

It looks nice but is far too small.

Make it around 1100 px wide.
I think you have talent.

Thank you, I appreciate that. The original psd size was at 1200 px, but for some reason every time I upload a larger image like a thread, it shrinks it down. Usually splitting the thread image in half helps, but I guess this one needs to be split into thirds to make it the original size. I do agree the font is barely legible at that size; I'll get around to fixing it later tonight. Thanks for your comment.

Thank you for the offer, but I can't because I'm actually not on my computer ATM, I'm at work, lol. I should be able to fix it once I'm able to get on my computer, but I'll contact you if I need any help. ?

This is great, do you do designs like this for other people? Or offer your services. This is honestly amazing.

mparks277 - January 2, 2016, 7:01 pm

Updated and larger thread is up, tell me what you think.

it's clean and nice, but you know.

negative space doesn't mean this.

It's the empty space that shows something or takes a form to deliver a message however in this, negative space is just empty.

The header is too big, because it's usually no one word in header also next time you design, make a thread design for yourself and write content design is felt, sample text turns off most people

MoabGFX - January 3, 2016, 8:50 am

Wow. Very good work man! Keep it up :) 9/10
