In the year 2072, the world's energy problems seem solved by a network of cross-dimensional electric-field inductors—"coils"—that extract energy from a seemingly infinite source. That source is the W dimension, a fourth plane that exists beyond the X, Y, and Z dimensions.

In this world, unofficial "illegal" coils harness powers that the police can't hope to counter. Dealing with these coils is the job of coil-hating repo man Kyoma, whose run-in with the unique coil android Mira leads the two to form a reluctant partnership.

I actually really enjoy this show so far. Randomly decided to download the first episode and wasn't disappointed.

The pacing feels very, very rushed for this anime. I'd recommend reading the manga - the pace is about 7-9x slower and you can get to learn the whole story.

That said, the translations are very behind now...

Mhm I hear ya, especially on the topic of trying to grasp what it means to be four-dimensional. Had to do a little bit of research to grasp the concept better, however the way the anime is set up it seems more focused on the characters with the crazy science & math storyline being filler which they probs could've gone and spent an episode or two like in Steins;Gate and such to explain the mere concept of it all rather than a few vague descriptions here and there.

Knife throwing is the most awesome fighting style ever.

I like the idea, it is different and honestly that is a very big reason why I watch anime in the first place - because the storylines are usually so much more original and creative, so I like this concept. Looks a little complicated but I am sure that will get cleared up as I watch - I will give the first episode a go later
