He's selling bots, not a "do everything for you so you can DOS a server service" seems like it's your fault for being uneducated about the product he was selling.

Do you have proof you didn't chargeback?

You need more solid proof, all I was able to determine from the conversation is that you walked into a deal you weren't ready for.

Firstly, buy bots is always risky. Many will deploy them out and then simply bot kill shortly after.

Secondly, he claims you charged back. do you offer any proof you did not charge back on him?

Kinguin - January 13, 2016, 2:49 pm

Well, how I can see this, is that you didn't understand anything about it, and he tried to say that you'd need to buy a rat off HF, which you didn't do, and then he was away for a little, and you opened a dispute against the Paypal transaction.

I'll hope that this get's resolved asap.

YOU need to supply the bot for him to deploy.

That is why you were told to buy Luminosity Link.

He should be filing a report against you, not the other way around, you back charged on him when you did not follow your end of the deal.

There was clear miscommunication here.

He demonstrated a botnet to you, not the bots you were going to have.

He sold you Bots, not a spot in a botnet.

I can understand how this might be unclear and maybe he SHOULD hae been more clear, but we also assume you know what you are buying if your asking for such items.

He directed you accordingly to the simplest solution for what your most probable cause was. He was not wrong in doing so, you needed to provide him bots to distribute. You failed to do so, by not supplying him a binary to distribute for your bots.

I am sorry if your not clear on how he is NOT mistaken here, but you should really do more research before making transactions.
