Thread: Quoting Message | Addition To Posting

Hello,

So I'm probably not the only one but when you make a post within a thread and it gets that cluster fucked that you're having to go through page-after-page to find out if someone replied?

Would this not be easier for instance to have a tick option like this for example:

☐Receive Message on Reply.

You would then have a message sent from them (would only be the thread owner, no one else; so you'd have to monitor really your own thread not let someone else ; if you're a group owner that is).

Would Be Like.

Quote:"Hello,
Thanks you for your reply, I have replied Here.

By clicking "Here", it would then redirect you to the reply allowing you to see the response?

Obviously you wouldn't allow this option to the thread owner as I could see the bombardment of the shit posting & what not for it, this would only be for when the owner of the thread replies?

I don't know however if this would come under notifications, seeing as you're not open to a notification more as a formal message of sorts?

Thanks,
AA.

Quote:10. Notification/Alert Systems. I will not be adding notification systems for actions like being quoted or when your name is mentioned.

No chance of this happening.

For years on end this has been requested and denied.
