Just not sure what I should say....

She's an adult, She can do what she wants.

Although you should warn her about the dangers of Cocaine and MDMA, Tell her you love her and wouldn't want anything bad to happen.

Your sister is an adult and she should be able to handle these drugs. If you see they start to have a bad influence on your sister you should talk about it with her.

She is a moron for doing the e. As for the cocaine, it is something that is also horrible but at least not fatal (most of the time).

Why is she an idiot for doing ecstasy?

Even when she's older then you, you should really talk about it. Don't let her do that cocaine shit.

The "MDMA" was prob cut with boat loads of shit. It also turns your brain into scrambled eggs. Does that sound smart to you?

Agree to an extent.

MDMA can have really bad effects in term of neurotoxicity with frequent use.

As long as you're not using it constantly and give a few weeks for your brain to replace the damaged serotonin nodes then you're not going to notice anything serious.

That being said, MDMA is still dangerous because it's often cut, but if you test it then the risk is low if you're smart.

It is horrible, period. The damage it does to your brain is nuts. No one should consume MDMA. Chances are, you will never have pure MDMA anyways. ?

hugsyou - January 21, 2016, 1:55 pm

Tell her you are uncomfortable with her living her life and you want her to stop right away.

4-FA all the way (;

Zanwald - January 21, 2016, 2:11 pm

It was probably meth. Real MDMA is hard to come by these days.

Whatever you do, ensure that you notify her that you understand that she is an adult who is free to make her own choices. Maybe try and say how her decision made you feel, and you're only saying something because you believe it is what is best for her.

Philip J Fry - January 21, 2016, 2:42 pm

Have you told her how you feel? Because that might be a good place to start
