My first big sale! I was really really lucky with this. Inspect element is a savior.

I've done a triple for 3 x $50. I felt too bad to go for the quad

Amyzing - January 21, 2016, 8:43 pm

I rarely dip. In my experience I find it much more profitable to just milk the customer.

What is this dipping thing? Can somebody explain or refer me to a guide/thread?

Basically u tell them u didnt get that shit and they need to pay again. I never do it but its a pretty popular method.

If you milk him then you can get more from him but when he knows the truth then you won't get any more .So it's not good to dip always try to milk the customers .

Whenever I dip, I usually manage to get at least $100 from the person, but they think they only paid the first amount ;). Quality, not quantity(Referring to people). The way I dip, I do it quick and easy, so that way they don't get smart and think about checking their bank account/PP.

Nice dip Bro. You're doing good elchupacabra.x - January 22, 2016, 3:27 pm

Always heard about quad dips, but never saw them. I usually double dip customers, after I've milked the hell out of them. Good dip, tho.

Thanks man!

And to everyone who's saying I should've milked the person; eh, not in this situation. He didn't seem like he wanted to buy more, it seemed as if it was he wanted something quick to jack off to or something. So I decided to dip. If it's in a situation where the customer is really fond of me, I would normally milk him.

Hmed - January 22, 2016, 3:55 pm

How are you gonna make sure he doesnt chargeback?

Kinguin - January 22, 2016, 3:55 pm

I've actually never double dipped them, as I prefer milking them instead.

But I'll totally try milking them next time.

This guy isn't too familiar with PayPal. He fell pretty hard for some inspect element stuff. I transferred the money out, anyways. Keeping it in another account for an extended period of time until I feel comfortable in finding a way to safely get it to my main. If he charges back, I still have his $45 Amazon GC so I wouldn't be too mad.

Double dipping usually isn't the best of ideas. It should only be used when the customer seems hesitant or seems as if they're not going to buy again. It can also be used as a way to get out of Skype, Sexting, and more.

Honestly, last time I got limited, I was selling Minecraft clients. I just told them that and they unlimited me. My transactions looked pretty similar like they are now.
