Welcome to the Titans iOS Help Desk.

This will be for all iDevices such as; iPods, iPads, iPhones, excluding the iWatch as I don't have one.

A little background information, I've personally been using iOS since the original iPod touch, and I'm still using iOS to this day. I've jailbroken the majority of my devices. I've also had a lot of issues with my iOS devices, so I'm sure if you have an issue I've probably had the same issue and I can possibly help you with it.

Any questions or problems you may have regarding iOS, post them here and I'll try to answer them to the best of my abilities. If you'd rather private message me with issues, please feel free to do so.

Use this to post:

Device: iPod Nano 6th generation

Issue/Question: The headphone jack on my iPod Nano 6th gen heated up and melted the right side of the plastic on the inside. Nothing else is damaged but that and the ribbon cable. How do you figure I fix this?

Hi,

In all honesty, I wouldn't even bother fixing it. IMHO it's almost worth buying a new one.

Repairing / replacing areas like that is extremely aggravating especially if you don't have the correct tools and whatnot. But if you want to attempt to repair / replace, please let me know, and I'll guide you the best I can.

Hi Cloud,

Would you mind Private messaging me what programs you're attempting to install, and what it's exactly saying when it tells you to update?

Device: iPhone 6

Issue/Question: I'm currently on version 9.1. Is there anyway to downgrade so I can jailbreak?

I doubt there is a way, but I know there's no set date on the next jailbreak release. :/

There is no way, Apple has stopped signing the 9.0.0-9.0.2 version, I would stay on 9.1 and just check the forum from time to time to see when the next jailbreak is out, I think it will like be 9.2 tho.

~CloudPlease, oh god. Do not update. The new iOS version is going to destroy your phone. I know they said the latest version runs lighter on older devices but it still kills it (in my opinion).

I've already fixed it by removing the logic board and using some remains of an iPhone ribbon cable, soldered it right up ?
