Thread: Proxy Grabber and Export to Text file

dash2009 - February 10, 2016, 1:28 pm

I want to share a very small app I created back in 2011.

It will grab proxies from xroxy.com and export to a text file for easy usage. I was going to add more sites but then found something else to pass my time.

It's not multi threaded so it will hang once you click grab proxies until it finishes. Feel free to edit the source code as per your likings.

Thanks for the post.

Sure man.

PM me if you need any help. :)

I would recommend uploading the source code to Github instead.

It's nice that you're trying and making some programs but I don't understand why you people keep on making the same type of software where there are a lot more and better tools, and when I say a lot it's fucking lot lol.

Why don't you try to make a bot for a website that no one else did yet and release for free and opensource?

Don't get me wrong here it's still nice that you're releasing code for free.

I partially agree. Sometimes the source posted can give insight on how to solve coding problems or do things differently from other people, but most of the time this does not apply though.
