haydrazs - February 16, 2016, 6:51 pm

<http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/technology-32019260>

Lol these autistic "journalists" who think they are writing ground breaking stuff on the super secret underworld of a public fucking technology forum have their pets here onsite.

Armada the clueless retard who claims he modifies university grades for money, aka the single 30+ year old who enjoys fishing according to his dating profile.

What's your opinion on these attention seeking snakes?

Moeseph - February 16, 2016, 6:54 pm that was quite the educational report from bbc, always quality stuff.

Site's elder, buahahahahahaaha.

"The big problem I faced joining the site is that I am a nobody. Sites such as Hack Forums and many others operate on a reputation economy. Long-standing members who have proved their worth to the community and who have lots of "vouches" from others have the best reputation and highest access.

By contrast newbies, like me, get almost none. I'd have to contribute 25 good quality posts before I could send any personal messages. This would make it hard to contact people directly - my preferred method." Source:bbc news

- Canadian, and no not Indian, nice try though. I can't stand the smell of curry either.

- Secondly, I knew this would be all your general reactions. But consider this for a moment. This journalist contacted us, with a very different impression of our community. True Demon and me took this as an opportunity to try and educate someone who does not know anything about this area of the internet and give them some actual information.

At the end and on publication, sadly quite a bit of the conversation we had seems to have been clipped out, but the original position this journalist seemed to want to take was a much more negative view towards the community. Despite not all of our transactions being included, he did a "ok" job at giving a accurate portrayal of what goes on around here, and that is all I really wanted to do.

So often do I get sick of reading articles by people who do not even bother to talk to people. They read and make assumptions. This was a primary reason I even decided to talk to the person. They at least tried to get some answers instead of assuming.

So whatever folks. like I said Have fun with the thread.

On topic: heres my pancake recipe.

In a large bowl, sift together the flour, baking powder, salt and sugar. Make a well in the center and pour in the milk, egg and melted butter; mix until smooth.
Heat a lightly oiled griddle or frying pan over medium high heat. Pour or scoop the batter onto the griddle, using approximately 1/4 cup for each pancake. Brown on both sides and serve hot.

Sad how you gauge "being known" with being a Lounge troll. Although I find no surprise in this, I find irony in all you Echos going about me being unknown and LQ when virtually every echo mbers 2 top posted forums are Lounge and the Echo SF.

He tried multiple members, to no surprise most would not give him the time of day. This guy had a much worse opinion about us as a whole and community. Frankly the entire discussion was not exactly fun, but it was viewed as an opportunity to maybe knock some of the bad media away, or at a minimal degree, explain not everyone is a child just trying to break peoples computers for no reason

"Hanging out with the script kiddies"

I'm pretty sure if it were only script kiddies on this site, it would have been compromised and leaked so many times before, but it's really secure.

PM me for new BBC Opsec ;)

Given the original opinion of the writer before speaking to us, this is a vast improvement. It would seem that he had very little interest in actually printing the purpose or any meaningful content in the conversation we had. Nevertheless, had he not spoken to us, I can guarantee that he would have proceeded to make HF look like a collection of unethical dweebs with RATs without any legitimate reasons to be here, such as for the sake of pure education.

Keep in mind, the writer came to us supposedly because we have documented experience in the security field. We did not ask for this. We agreed to offer our opinions on the terms that it was understood we were just ordinary members and not any kind of spokespersons for HF. Still, I had a feeling that this would happen.

Someone always has to make a joke of it. We tried our best to save his opinion of HF from being just above his previous, abysmally low presuppositions about the quality of HF's members. His first assumption was that everyone goes to HF to learn to become a criminal. As if we don't already have enough NCA and FBI scrutiny on us as it is.

I'm not here to perpetuate the misconception that hackers are malicious little twats who can't behave like responsible adults and instead seek their vengeance on a journalist who is just doing his damn job. He found an interesting thing to write about, and he asked our opinions because we have been here a long time. Obviously he has been here for less than a few days. Of course he doesn't know anything about us. Leave him be. Don't you have better things to do that to make an innocent reporter's life miserable?

You all disappoint me. I will look forward to seeing your negative reputation spamming up my profile.

The fact you keep referencing grades show how little you grasped over that fiasco, but I digress.

Ellie Is Bae - February 17, 2016, 6:11 am

"The "script kiddy" state of mind is one that is regularly debated on HF. On one lengthy message thread, a member called Disparity kicked off the discussion about morals by calling people who use remote access tools "worthless, ethic-lacking scum". As their name implies, remote access programs give their creators access to a victims' PC. Some use this access to spy, steal or profit."

Would just like to point out that disparity scammed me and one other $30. So don't think this kid has any right to call anyone "worthless, ethic-lacking scum".

Because people who imply they have the expertise to hack into Harvard and enrol someone in the university in a poor attempt to scam somebody who is clearly not by the closest bit tech savvy are quite pathetic.
