Thread: AT&T DOMINATION | THE ULTIMATE METHOD FOR TRULY UNLIMITED DATA | NEW LOWER PRICE

Egregious - February 20, 2016, 7:41 pm

The method that you see other people selling is not this method.
This isn't just logging into your AT&T account and setting your data to the unlimited plan.
Read the complete FAQ for more information.

How many copies are currently left?
There are currently two copies remaining.
There are no vouch copies available to be given out.
Pricing details are available below.

What does this method do?
This method simply allows you to have truly unlimited data.
Unlike AT&T's official unlimited data plan, there is no throttling.
You have access to full speeds, no matter how much data you use.
Here is a screenshot of our speed test even after blowing through 50GB.
Spoiler (Click to View)

You must currently have a family data plan enabled on your account.
Unlike AT&T's official unlimited plan, you do not need a DirecTV subscription.
You need to have access to the AT&T account your device is connected to.

How does this method differ from the official plan?

Using this method costs little to nothing on top of what you're already paying.
Unlike AT&T's official unlimited data package, there are extra features.
This method does not require DirecTV subscription package.
Using this method will prevent throttling and allows for hotspot tethering.
Adding more devices, such as tablets, will not incur extra data charges.

At the moment, we believe our current price is the sweet spot between method cost and savings, so we probably won't be lowering the price for the first buyer.

Does this involve calling up AT&T with a variation of saying that your kid or whatever used your data without your permission and then they reset your data for you (considering you need a family plan enabled)? That makes sense because you've said multiple times, "you only have to do this when you need to do it again."

If not, what makes this better and worth the extra $200 than that public method that works just fine? Also, would this work for other companies since it's so extensively tested or just AT&T because they have something specific to their company that is exploitable?

Not sales trashing in the slightest, just trying to get my money's worth.

I have a sick child, my going offline had nothing to do with your question. As stated on the thread, this is not AT&T's official unlimited data package. Our method will not throttle you after using up 22GB of bandwidth, and includes perks such as hotspot tethering, adding additional devices at no extra data charge, and other benefits. A DirecTV subscription is not required to use it.

Your method does not have the benefit of saving subscribers any money, but rather adding on top of their monthly usage bill. It's not the promotion that comes with the DirecTV subscription, so the reason you're able to get the unlimited data plan is because you're paying full price for it. The end goal is not only to have unlimited data, or so you say, but a way to save money or spend little to none out-of-pocket costs for doing so. As well as the many perks mentioned earlier. Regardless, best of luck on your endeavors.

You see, by doing that, you're just using AT&T's throttled unlimited data plan. Yes, it will cost much, much more. This is not simply switching your account to their unlimited throttled package with very limited features.

I've been using this method for 2 months now. Easy rinse and repeat way to get unlimited data through AT&T.

Vouch, just purchased. Well designed, self-explanatory, and would suck his dick for another copy.

It doesn't charge extra to your account. I have been using this method for almost two years. You can see there are several people who have purchased this method who have vouched, also. If you have any questions, feel free to post them or shoot me a PM.

Does this involve/require any form of social engineering. i.e: contacting AT&T Customer Support?

NO ABSOLUTELY NOT. I (and anyone who has purchased this method) can perform this method in a matter of minutes (1 or 2) without contacting anyone.
