s8nism - February 27, 2016, 8:11 am

YinYang - February 27, 2016, 8:11 am something really sad happens doe :'((no spoilers :(

Innocent Vigilante - February 27, 2016, 8:14 am

Cheers for not spoiling! But it's so good so far, it seems like it doesn't have that hollywood hacker concept like bullshit hacking terms, he actually sounds real.

watch all episodes the day they came out, and I agree, the way the hacking is shown is far better than i expected

In many ways he is like myself, but I'd say everyone that watches this show would say that lolol. and yeah I'm keen, bit over half an hour into 2nd episode now, Easily my new fav show.

gabethebabe1983 - February 27, 2016, 10:07 am i think the show is entertaining and i enjoy how they show realistic hacking unlike most tv shows/movies

Samusin - February 27, 2016, 10:08 am

it's very good indeed. i like the way they keep you thinking who is real and who is just his imagination. It's a little bit like the end of "who am i - no system is safe"

Mr Robot offers the most realistic depiction of hacking I've ever seen on TV, but that isn't saying much given that most television series make hacking look like a joke.

So true dude, everything so far I have seen on this show is a legitimate hacking term and makes sense, Except for the part where he rang his phone off that guys phone and then deleted his number from the call log... His number would still be on that guys phone record that he made a call to that number, so that was a silly move unless it was a burner number.

I don't have a smart phone so I couldn't really call bullshit on that scene. I assumed his number would still be on the phone record, but is the record view able by the owner of the phone or would the owner need to call his service provider to grab the number?

I did find it hard to believe that Angela, one of the lower level managers at Allsafe, didn't know what a rootkit was. Some of the hacks are kind of grasping though. But I don't want to spoil it for ya.

Yeah the owner of the phone should get a phone statement of all the numbers he has called, well I do anyways for my work phone and personal, but nonetheless it would only take a call to his carrier to do it, and yeah I thought her not knowing what a rootkit was a little odd as well hahaha

In a way elliot reminds me of dexter but in the hacker world
