PGP - Pretty Good Privacy - is a way to encrypt text and files. It is a common way to encrypt its messages, as only the recipient can decrypt the message using his (of course incredibly long and secure code). The clever part is that example. when a for a like to have the communication that happens between you and other members must be confidential, you can choose to have your PGP Public key, for example. your signature or a link to pastebin, wherein it is. Once they have your Public key can encrypt all the messages they want, only you can decrypt. Then they will send you the encrypted message and you can then decrypt it. When you then reply, of course, just have their public key. It is often used in Deepweb, and the Gate.

Download GPG4win and install it when you are done you can open the "Cleopatra" It will be under "Gpg4win" in the start menu.

Press "File" and "New Certificate". We start by making a "Personal OpenPGP key" so we push the top. It will ask for the name and email.

You do not provide true information if it is a forum would make good sense and provide your alias.

Email write just something random that just has to be @ and. something in.

Tap you on until you need to enter your "Passphrase", make sure it is good long and safe.

Preferably with special characters and so on. The enter twice and bum, then you have created you.

o get their hands on your Public Key (The you must give out), right-click on your new certificate and press "Export Certificates". It is for your public key, you can either give it a new name, or just keep it generated. Save the file somewhere you can find again and open it with notepad or another editor.

You've got your Public Key. Share it out so people can send messages to you.

Now for sending message to someone else's PGP public key then import it, create a text file and discard all Key briefly into.

Save it as an asc file and press "Import certificates" and select the file you made.

To encrypt a message, you must have the message in a normal text document, it can be any, but I prefer notepad. Save the file and go into the Cleopatra again. Use the "Files" and "Sign / Encrypt Files" Select the file and press on. You do not need to sign the file, just encrypt as it stands on and select "Text output (ASCII armor)."

Press on, and "Add" the certificate / person you want to send to. Press on and so finish.

Now you can open the file you just encrypted in the notepad and send the message to the person.

Then last step when you receive a message again just create a text file with all the encrypted text, now press the "Decrypt / verify files" and choose your file. pressure decrypt if you are satisfied with the location of the file, you write your Passphrase and bum, 1 piece of decrypted message.

Anybody should be able to PM via PGP now, sorry if you're getting alot of skid applies via PGP now Bandors xD
