If you would like me to test your stub, please send me a direct download link over a PM.

I can also give you some help, depending on what the situation is with your rat.

Thanks.

Id take caution when giving your "malware" to people who you do not know this is very dangerous

XREMIXHD7 - March 27, 2016, 7:35 pm

Syria is right!

That's why i share my screen to some users while I do it.

This is a legitimate service, anyway.

This is a legitimate service, anyway. Exactly, he let me see his screen and NOTHING was going on other than the RAT testing. Also, if he is some FBI agent (Which I doubt he is), he WILLINGLY put the RAT into his computer, so technically nobody is at fault.

ThatBlackDude - March 28, 2016, 1:11 am

Hmmm.. why dont u just upload the rat to scanning site it would be an easy way to test, im preety sure if u upload it to virus total and its not crypted u can just make a new one? i know when its crypted it should stay off most scanning sites :)

Still nice service.

aphotic - March 28, 2016, 1:19 pm

That's not why they would have him test it. They would have him test it to make sure they have configured it correctly, and that the traffic makes it through their home firewall.

XREMIXHD7 - March 29, 2016, 7:05 am

Online and testing rats!

Send me your stub in a pm.

Why would it be dangerous? ?

It's not illegal if both agree.

yes very dangerous, i dont think you want other people to have your malware.

there are hundreds of ways that makes this very very dangerous

XREMIXHD7 - March 29, 2016, 3:56 pm

Unless you can see what they're doing at all times and to make sure they wipe it from their vm after.

Then you can just remove the download link.

I don't see what you can do with malware with Law. It's just a test at the end of the day. Nothing illegal.

jenymat - March 29, 2016, 4:32 pm

Vouch, thanks for the VM install.

Thank you !

Explain, please. I don't see any reason why it would be dangerous.

I can guarantee there is nothing dangerous about giving this guy your malware. He's a former client of mine, give him a break and let him help people too.

I'd like to state my opinion on this disagreement.

You can never trust anyone really, but I wouldn't say it's "Dangerous"

Although it could lead to some not so great things...

Honestly the worst I can see happening is if your sending your stub to an asshole and he decides to get your ip with your stub and DDOSes you.

Or if your using a outdated rat and he does an exploit on you...

If the member has some decent reviews on the thread I wouldn't worry about it.

Well, you should always use at least one (protected) VPN if not a VPS.
