Thread: PayCore Fraudulent Activities | Stay Away!

Secret Agent - March 28, 2016, 7:19 pm

So I recently had a buyer who paid $10 for one of my products with BTC and the payment went through PayCore's system successfully and marked the invoice as paid. (Proof: <https://i.imgur.com/mkBvfY0.png>). How PayCore's BTC payment works is it generates a new wallet for each payment, so you don't receive the BTC payment directly from the buyer, and then the BTC is sent to your wallet. The buyer received his product but I did not receive any BTC to my wallet. The buyer sent his BTC to the correct address 1P1SBFBq6hrjk3kmYugV889z8gZEed6KuZ.

Since Razor hasn't been on HF for about two weeks, I PMed ?Elios to claim my BTC but hasn't been resolved yet. In addition, it looks like Razor have several open scam reports against him.

I am not the only one that had this happen and it is not a one-time error. If you read the last pages of <https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=4952097> there's a lot of people that have the same problem.

Coming back to my story, a day after the buyer sent his BTC, some of the BTC in the wallet that the buyer paid to went to 1PzZ4dFc8avdPDLLyqRDdZsWbWgFVcqUG5. If you search up that address, you come across a HF post by McDolands that posted the exact address.

This doesn't exactly lead anywhere but questions me why it would be sent to him.

This problem recently just started happening.

For now, I suggest staying away from PayCore.

Orgy - March 28, 2016, 7:27 pm

Did you check your account settings to make sure your account didn't get hacked and the btc address changed?

You're really at the right place at the right time, with the right resources. Just saying. God knows if you can own the market and all other forums out there.

My account didn't get hacked and I've also checked my account payment settings after the buyer bought my product if everything was correct and it was.

What the hell are you talking about?

Alskling - March 28, 2016, 7:33 pm

Aye my man, switched to Paylvly already? Cure the leaks before talking about the leaks, you don't wanna lose more, haha.

Anyone know of any alternatives that is not Payivy or AIObuy?

Vitani - March 29, 2016, 2:11 pm

Hmm i really hope razor is starting a scamming spree. Although he already owes a few k in total to several members.

Staff will get a headache from all the shit that has been going on today for sure.

If you sell a cracking guide or something simmilar pp gets limited and the btc autobuy is slow as fuck

Same for PayCo.re, best is using CoinPayments and your own system for Paypal.
The bitcoin network is slow, that's not the fault of any Autobuy services, a total of 6 confirmations on transactions are needed for them to be claimed as secure.
PayCo.re only takes 1 to deliver, and Paylvy takes 2, Paylvy is technically more secure because it is possible with some advanced setup to gain confirmations onto a fake transaction up to 6 of them, then it's not possible.

Its imposible to reverse it after 1 confirm lol

Trust me it is, it's just about making so that is your machine that will confirm it onto the network, and provide a fake confirmation, if you own the whole Bitcoin mining hardware and mine using it, you can fake every transaction.

I kinda see something getting huge comming from this...paycore is not a registered company. No one should fully trust non-registered companies that hold your money... thats basic I think

Edit: if its a registered company, you guys can get him in court with proofs very easy since you are able to see in whos name is the company registered aswell phone number and address.

I never used paycore, payivy only after purchased by another company because they are not trusted. Paycore and others failed in achieving sh1eld achievement and they will now get all your money

When is the last time you received a BTC payment? Myself and a lot of other users haven't been getting ours recently.

Posting so I can come back with updates/to see if there ends up being a resolution.
Sorry this is happening to people. Hopefully it gets figured out.

I've heard that there is this new payment processor coming out soon that should be a hell of a lot better. Looking forward to it.

?Elios - March 30, 2016, 9:20 am

I'm doing my best getting everything back to normal.

I'm not a 100% what is going on right now. I don't see any suspicious activity on our servers.
I sadly can't do this all on my own tho, as Razor doesn't seem to get on...

I'll notify everyone when i know a bit more.

Edit:

He doesn't have internet acces atm...

Nex+ - March 30, 2016, 9:59 am

If the payment isn't funded in full, even down buy $0.01 it will hold the money for 12-24 hours or something like that then refund the user who paid.

Check the balance owed to the amount sent and pay the difference yourself if any.

Though he shouldn't have been able to download it.

I send $43 through paycore all the time with no issues

What!? Is that even possible?

What about coinpayment and bitpay? I saw neteller using bitpay and the fee is 1% for bitpay.

What are coinpayment fee then?

Will both have problems such as paying less then getting the product download links or reverse the transaction after getting the product download links?

Thanks.

Thanks.Nah, not really. The network would see it and correct it way before it got there.

But hey, if you're scared of a single confirmation <https://AlOBuy.net> requires two so feel free to use that.
