Thread: Why is blatant racism & harassment permissible?

minimalist - April 2, 2016, 11:27 am

I can recount so many posts that I've reported that contain shitty insults against Indians, Pakistanis, Sikhs...etc. Only a handful of them have been removed, and it's really shitting up the threads where clashes between the bullies and the people on the receiving end happen.

I used to think that they were mildly humorous but no longer - you take all of their posts that comprise flaming, harassment and blatant racism and it makes for a cancerous environment for all.

It's something to do with the members within the circlejerk that is Echo. The group owner tends to stay out of it, from what I've seen.

He bumped the price up to $25000. There's nothing stopping him, that's the beauty of an open marketplace.

Shoe - April 2, 2016, 12:24 pm

Often times we're just told "report the post as lq and move on." I'm often times doing that or someone beats me to it, yet nothing is done. I understand some things may not be seen as rule violations, but I don't know how some of these posts are "funny" or "laughable." Additionally, when posts are actually removed, nothing's done. I'll see one of Shockley's posts come up and then it gets deleted, he's not warned or anything. Same with $uicide or funtage.

HF has it's own way of running things and I think this is the way it'll stay, whether we like it or not.

Yes, they do get banned.

Look at Grievous.. their time is coming.

Tibit got closed at the time he owned Empire.

Omni would relish the chance to ban someone, and make an easy 10k reselling their group.

It definitely shouldn't be. One of the rules is something along the lines of "this isn't 4chan, don't treat it as such" and lol.. it very much is treated like 4chan by quite a few members.

However, I guess people are entitled to their racist, sexist, etc opinions (gross, I know) but the way they're expressed on here is toxic and detrimental to the HF community as a whole. It shouldn't be allowed IMO.

That seems to be the general nature of the internet. It would be a colossal waste of time to be policing what everyone said, and it might be a nearly impossible endeavor. Some people are just inherently distasteful. If they really bother you, block them so you no longer see their comments.

That slippery slope would only lead to more and more things getting banned. It seems like there's always someone who gets offended by something, so there's just not a way to cater to everyone. I don't see much that's overly abhorrent or grotesque on here because the staff do take care of that stuff. The rest that is left allows you to see the unfiltered thoughts of a fellow member. Whether you like it or not, these people exist in the real world.

I don't see much that's overly abhorrent or grotesque on here because the staff do take care of that stuff. The rest that is left allows you to see the unfiltered thoughts of a fellow member. Whether you like it or not, these people exist in the real world.
couldn't have stated it better myself!

Been reporting such posts but guess what when they get banned for it, after the ban period they do it even more.

I used to think that they were mildly humorous but no longer - you take all of their posts that comprise flaming, harassment and blatant racism and it makes for a cancerous environment for all.

That slippery slope would only lead to more and more things getting banned. It seems like there's always someone who gets offended by something, so there's just not a way to cater to everyone. Blocking members doesn't prevent me from viewing their posts so I disregard the function altogether. The rule is already there but it's just not entirely enforced.

The fuck are you saying? This forum has rules and the posts are being removed. Members like NTT have been removed because they've spammed the forums with their shittalk and thoughts, why have the offenders not been punished here?

This forum needs fewer people who can't argue proper arguments and instead misinterpret the OP, following up with a comment using glorious rhetoric in order to cover up the problem.

NTT posts were actually quite beneficial to the forum compared to your non-sense SJW agenda

How do you not take something personally when the attack is meant to be taken personally?

By definition it doesn't matter if it bothers you or not it's PERSONAL.

The recent harassment hasn't been directed at a group of people, or just shooting into a crowd, members are being directly(that means personally) singled out and attacked on every single post they make.

hiPedro - April 3, 2016, 4:02 am

It's simple really, just ignore the posts that you dislike/feel insulting or whatever effect it has on you and only read/post on threads you actually think are worth posting on. Honestly getting angry or whatever over it is the reaction most of the posts aim to get and they just aren't worth it.

I agree that it is toxic and people should know better, but the ability to express those ideas is what makes the internet great, and is expected to an extent.

Spoiler (Click to View)

I relate more to the casual autistic insults, because i am diagnosed.

Still dosent bother me, though it is toxic behavior.

I think people just need to be open-minded and stop generalizing people by factors that can not be changed.
