Lot more involved than that. A good amount of members already know most things going on and I gave them explanations but I don't see the need to explain my life to the rest of the population of HF.

Life happens and that's all I will say.

Titans wasn't about money, and Minecrafters won't be either. I didn't buy a group to make money. For those that don't know... owning a group is not the best way to make money lol. Especially after people like Syrah or whatever ruining groups reputation. Nobody trusts owners not to sell out anymore. Anonymous owned 2 groups. The reason was he bought a group with his friend and became the owner. Then they both bought another group without asking Omni for ownership permission. Anonymous' friend didn't want to own the group, and the money had been paid. So Omni made the exception though he was clear that he would not make it again.

Nobody with a sane mind will keep a group as non-profit like that. fbn tried that out, but the thing is that HF is not worthy of good art. And do not get me wrong, I am no good artist, but the userbase here cannot appreciate 'art'. It's like a kid who wants a cat and talks about it non-stop to his parents; he'll get bored of the cat two weeks after getting it without proper care or guidance.

Groups are a token of social power on HF. And people should employ that to maximize their revenue while still holding a valuable position. That's why I would respect high-tier business people who know the do's, the hows and the whats more than an ambitious artist who blew 7 grands on a group he cannot benefit from.

It should not cost you 7k to share your art. Just go at your local youth group or even college club.

It should not cost you 7k to share your art. Just go at your local youth group or even college club. Art-based doesn't necessarily mean it's non-profitable. Collaborations with other artists could provide for many opportunities in marketing design / production services. This was one of the ideas starting the group, but I didn't have the time to commit to it and things happened IRL that didn't allow for much involvement on site. My point is, "marketing" groups aren't the only way to make money here. If you limit yourself to that, then sure that's all there'll ever be, but there's always other ways if you take the time to establish them and they're good ideas.

Well...

I had a vision very similar to this but Glitch beat me to the punch. Since the group is for sale and I don't really see anybody stepping up to the plate to give the members a home, I'll be more than glad to. I guess the Content Creators recruitment is back on?

And do not get me wrong, I am no good artist, but the userbase here cannot appreciate 'art'. It's like a kid who wants a cat and talks about it non-stop to his parents; he'll get bored of the cat two weeks after getting it without proper care or guidance.

Groups are a token of social power on HF. And people should employ that to maximize their revenue while still holding a valuable position. That's why I would respect high-tier business people who know the do's, the hows and the whats more than an ambitious artist who blew 7 grands on a group he cannot benefit from.

It should not cost you 7k to share your art. Just go at your local youth group or even college club. Art is more than just illustrations and whatever other form of fine art. There's a huge field of designing which is heavily based upon marketing. The group could offer a design service in terms of threads, signatures, logos, etc. And the members who want to be part of it can get their share as well. People go to Art school for a reason, it's not just recreational. Dunno if Riptide already did what I just said but if the future owner of the group wants to keep the subject the same he should consider what I just said.

Very often I see people scraping 7k bucks for an "official group" as an "investment", with no clear idea of what to do with it. I have seen people asking the community what to do with their 7k purchase, where "lol drugs" or something similar comes up. The group gets branded around their topic, owner realizes they didn't have to spend that much money for a discussion platform and they have no clear vision on how to get a return on investment (after promising mom "trust me good niche market"), get hit by that buyer's remorse and end up selling.

The oh-so-familiar cycle repeats.

I'm going to assume you aren't talking about me since, a) I buy things with my own money, I don't get handouts, and b) I never really wanted to make a profit out of it and mostly just wanted to have a sub-community of talented individuals.

I'm deciding to sell because I didn't get to be as involved as I would have liked, and a lot of things are going on outside of HF.

It was a great experience for the time I was able to be involved and starting up and everything, but I don't want to just hold it anymore if I'm not going to be active and I have major lifestyle changes happening right now.

This is still for sale. PM me if you have an offer.

$20 is a nice amount to be honest, great group and friendly people, i even got free btc from being in there(Nice guy who ran it :D)

Anyway, if you have the funds, and can't see how to make a profit out of owning a group, then i don't know what to say

Ignore the haters glitch

Funny that Nobility tells me to list it as 7k then drops his thread price to 6.5.

So much for that talk on willpower.
