Thread: [\[Razorcrypt\] To everyone that got raided \[Lawyer\]](#)

C00000000000000N - April 7, 2016, 1:47 am

Keep in mind that I live in Germany and the laws in your country might be different !

I had a meeting with a lawyer today specialized on IT/Internet rights and all the laws bound to that.

As long as you don't have any RAT tools or similar stuff on your PC you're completely fine. The crime you're suspected of §202c is the preparation to spy or steal data. In my case they raided me because of a PP transaction 2 years ago (which I don't even remember). Now if 2 years after the initial commitment of the crime there's no malware found on your PC, they can't convict you of a preparation since noone prepares 2 years and then suddenly starts to spread malware.

On the other hand if they find let's say DarkComet on your PC they still have to prove that you actively used it to spread it and steal peoples personal infos. So DarkComet with no connected victims would be fine.

Everyone just relax and check your mailbox from time to time, most of you will find a letter that says your case got closed.

Kind regards

Water doesn't do anything to it unless it's powered on. Even then it'll just fry the circuits that power the disk, the actual information stored on it will remain almost untouched. Hopefully you're not in a situation where you have to destroy evidence because you'd be straight fucked.

If I understand the situation correctly the US put a lot of pressure on other countries to carry out these raids. When they did the first run of Blackshades raids it was the largest, most organized international raid of it's kind ever carried out. I imagine the decision to carry these raids out wasn't entirely your police force's decision.

Wow you're dumb...

IT WILL FRY THE CIRCUITRY BUT LEAVE YOUR DATA INTACT.

What point of that sentence do you not understand? No point in soaking it in water if the data is still readable if you connect the HDD to another computer and/or an investigation of the drive occurs. Your best bet would be destroying it to small pieces and then spreading them around your state.

Yeah but it won't damage the platters where the data is stored. Similar to if you get water on a CD it does nothing.

All they would do is take the platters out of the drive and put them into a new one, plus if you poured water on your PC during a raid they know you've done something you shouldn't.

This. Do it right the first time, you wouldn't have had to worry about this.

The German police They fuck all up, make a fucking press conference for the news and other sites just too scare other people or too look like they make shit for normal german people and raiding the 1337 People that buyd a fucking crypter for some $$.

They Should take care of serious shit but not this.

The refugees rape all womans in germany and they have nothing to do then raid people for a crypter. gg.

HAHA i was thinking this the whole team reading these threads.

Black Shadow - April 10, 2016, 3:29 pm

You could just say you use it to monitor your own PC fuck the law ?

Pericles - April 10, 2016, 3:35 pm

So I just read the first line or two and what I grasped this is...

In Germany, even possessing such a tool as a RAT would give your government the right to obtain a search warrant purely based on the data obtained from raiding the owner of RazerCrypt?

HIGH_JAX - April 10, 2016, 3:46 pm

That's good for a lot of people. I mean, no one hear really has any victims. That or they have one sorry SOB infected.

>people use software that is designed and intended for illegal use >people in this thread are flipping out not realizing that it was illegal >actually thinking this software was sold for the legal purposes

I had a meeting with a lawyer today specialized on IT/Internet rights and all the laws bound to that.

As long as you don't have any RAT tools or similar stuff on your PC you're completely fine. The crime you're suspected of §202c is the preparation to spy or steal data. In my case they raided me because of a PP transaction 2 years ago (which I don't even remember). Now if 2 years after the initial commitment of the crime there's no malware found on your PC, they can't convict you of a preparation since noone prepares 2 years and then suddenly starts to spread malware.

On the other hand if they find let's say DarkComet on your PC they still have to prove that you actively used it to spread it and steal peoples personal infos. So DarkComet with no connected victims would be fine.

Everyone just relax and check your mailbox from time to time, most of you will find a letter that says your case got closed.

Kind regards

Star ?

Or you just encrypt ur shit.

They got raided by gravedigging threads related to RazorCrypt. Be careful!

arma23hacker - August 8, 2017, 4:07 am never do any money transactions online or ever through hacking, it all can be tracked pretty easily, bitcoin is the way to go because its completly anonymous and all the hacks are switching to that method of currency now
