Thread: OVH Drop

xLelouch - April 7, 2016, 4:34 pm

I need to take down a OVH server.

IP and port - <http://pastebin.com/8JHQAqLY>

I would prefer botnet spot or some sort of method I can control the attack but even if its not possible and you can just offer a ddos service send me your best price for 1 hour (I will buy more than 30 hours depending on your service)

If you can do this please PM me a check-host result(with that port).

Spoiler (Click to View)

Thank you.

Status - Still looking for this

Nobody on here will hold OVHs who can. I don't know why you people think that.

Started it for a few 20 minutes.

Tell me if it's down.

Well. I don't want them DDOS them 30 hours straight. Their limits can be discussed.As long as they can take down it at least 10 mins I will make a deal with them.

Thanks for your interest

If it's only a website it won't be hard to down. But if you're asking to drop the whole server instead of just the website it's a different story.

Sometimes 92.x.x.x:29000 shows offline but once you refresh it it shows online. That happnes. so please make sure to hold your attack for 1 minute and keep refreshing the site. Pm'ed most of the people but didn't find any yet.

Guys,

I tried this with OP:

Layer7 on port 29000 and 80 but the gameserver running on there needs also to be off.

so i think you will need some good I4+I3 power

257207954 - April 9, 2016, 5:32 am

The website was easily downed.

Just so you know, if anyone says they have a working OVH "drop" they are more than likely lying to you.

this is tough lol ovh + cloudflare with a pretty website simple design (the more design the website the higher http flood impact is)

All depends of the server and the used attack, if you've done a layer-7 attack and it was a webserver then it worked, but what about when you perform a L4 attack and their system turns on ? This is where it gets challenged.

It really all just depends on the attack size, flags used, etc. most people on this site can't do it.
Hence the 99.9% statement. :)

If you increase the TCP window size at offset 0x4D you should be able to down OVH pretty well.

For a full TCP connection the handshake has to occur, not unless you're just outright sending a flag
