I go on plenty of fish. Does that count?

shinkupkmn - April 11, 2016, 5:58 pm

i used to go out fishing a while back but now i just fish in some random ponds whenever i get the chance

I go for fun occasionally. Just a basic set-up. What is it you're trying to find out OP?

I've got two tournaments lined up in the next two months, and if I win one I get a full ride to wherever I want in college.

I love fishing ! Now that warmer weather is coming in, it's time to go fishing for some large mouth bass. What fish are you looking for? I love fishing for those, the largest I caught was 7lbs. Also rainbow trout and brook trout are common where I live.

For large mouth, I use a spinner bait or a senko

Fishing is one of my bigger hobbies, ice-fishing, summer-fishing, fly-fishing. I enjoy all kinds of fishing. I also love to sit and study the water surface, seeing insects developing, mating, laying eggs and see the fish eat the flies etc.

Aquatic life and rocks/minerals is my biggest hobby after music.

I am an avid fisherman and just went yesterday even. Freshwater mainly in rivers and lakes.

Mainly for crappie, bass, trout, shellcracker, and catfish.

What would you like to know?

I fish every single weekend.. Sometimes during the weeks if I get time. I have a bass boat, and compete in tournaments about 3 or 4 times a month. I follow a club trail that travels all over North and South Carolina.. Plus I'll pick up wildcat tournaments when the opportunity presents itself.

(Apr 11, 2016 05:56 PM)Vulturii Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Do you actually know the core basics as well as most stuff such as a reel, bait, rod, etc , or do you just fish for fun and have a basic setup ?

I sometimes ride with up to 15 rods on the deck... But 6 basic setups are all you really need. Feel free to pm me for any questions about specifics.
