What the fuck?

Saitama is the strongest anime character. And I am not speaking out of fandom or hype from One-Punch Man, it's alright and all, but Saitama is literally the strongest because his power grows to whatever he needs to face.

You're speaking of some guy who kills anything and everything with one punch, and finds it boring to kill baddies. Whether it be a giant colossus or some alien figure, Saitama does it in no sweat, and strives to find an opponent that will restore the thrill of being a hero in him.

He doesn't have the brains Lelouch has, or the friends Goku has, he can't 'transform' or fly, but what he CAN do is fuck anything up with one single punch. And it has been shown that whatever he needs to face, his power goes up radically.

He can move faster than speed-o-sound Sonic, can clear areas insanely fast. And the best thing is that he's just some regular guy who went through intensive training, yet he's the strongest man ever. He can get crushed by literally anything and anyone and not be affected by it.

It does not live up to the hype, and hes not the strongest pretty weak infact. Let's just take Goku for example he can destory multiple planets with on effort, one punch man didn't even 1 hit the last boss yes he had spare power but that's not even close to Goku or most other characters in Dragon Ball.

What hype? I literally said that I wasn't following any hype. Sure, kids might be hyped with the concept, but statistically speaking, someone whose power keeps growing at the need is literally invincible.

To be quite honest, yes. If you're going to keep being in favor of DBZ with the whole Goku fanbase, you won't get anywhere. We're speaking of characters in their respective universes. Saitama can't die to anything in his universe, but Goku has indeed died in his universe.

Saitama could kill him in one punch. You need to watch the anime and see how devastating Saitama's foes can be, how literally every hero gets fucked by monsters Saitama defeats in one punch in such an apathetic way, it's ridiculous.

Depends what Universe we are talking about, Goku can no longer die in GT because of been fused with the dragonballs and in Super hes a super god, I doubt hes gonna die again.

However that is still a example question as a joke.

'Last boss' is something you could consider to be able to ravage entire worlds. I believe that if Saitama could beat the 'last boss' then he probably could beat most DBZ characters.

'Super god'. Lol.

Well he was a god and now he has surpassed that form aka Super Saiyan Blue, and okay lets give an example Saitama can 1 hit monsters ect, he can also mass damage land and the environment however even the least powerful characters such as Krillin can destroy the world. Saitama would not stand a chance against any of the Z fighters.

You're taking blatantly superpowered characters who are literal Gods in their universes and yet completely ignoring the setting Saitama has in his own universe. It's pointless to try to argue this with you because you're always going to go back to the argument that 'even krillin can destroy the world'. You're speaking of a blatantly superpowered UNIVERSE that contains weaklings in comparison to their counterparts that can destroy dimensions. It's like taking an omnipresent, omniscient and omnipotent entity and putting it up against Superman or some shit. While Superman in his universe is quite strong, it's completely out of reason to put him up against God himself or stronger entities from OTHER universes that are completely baffled out of reason.

The reason for which people love DBZ is because every char is strong. But in Saitama's world, he is the strongest. If DBZ chars entered his world, his power would probably grow over their own, as it was demonstrated that Saitama's power equals what he needs to actually get done, as such, you could consider his power to be infinite as it grows to face whatever he needs to face.

I just find it a shitty thing to take blatantly OP characters that can destroy universes and put them in a completely different universe under the assumption that 'they'd fuck shit up'. That's like saying that Alucard from Hellsing after consuming Schroedinger who's omnipresent could kill anyone since he's everywhere and nowhere. That's like saying that Kira could write Goku's name in some Death Note 'just because', implying that Goku could not do anything about it, and if he didn't know, he couldn't.

I find it a shitty thing too because it's obvious as daylight that you're ultimately in the favor of OP characters who wipe worlds and spend dozens of episodes fighting each other, and in all honesty, DBZ is very much overrated. I'm not defending the ideal that Saitama could kill anyone, I'm defending the ideal that it's utterly ridiculous to take characters from an anime where everyone IS OP and then claiming that it's something completely normal.

If $2+2=4$ it's $=4$ everywhere. If Saitama can one punch anyone since he's the One-Punch man then what keeps him from attacking the weakest DBZ characters with his faster-than-sound speed? He didn't one punch the last boss since he didn't actually face such power before, but his powers adjusted to meet the challenge. Exponentially.

This isn't about Saitama. If you're going to stick with your logic please close this thread because it's pointless if all you're going to say is 'I'm pretty sure Goku is the strongest' because there is no room for discussion and it's going to look cringeworthy.

That "Shit Anime" actually made more sales than many other animations based off its simple idea of One Punch.

One Punch Man manga series has sold over 1 million copies within 3 weeks.

Way more than Akame ga Kill could ever hope to reach.

It's story line may be simple, however it does not mean it is less of an anime in anyway
