Thread: Gross Gore PERMANENTLY banned from Twitch.TV

Rita Ora ? - April 19, 2016, 5:27 pm

Ali 'Gross Gore' Larsen, a popular UK League of Legends streamer has seen his www.twitch.tv channel disabled by the community for 'terms of service violations'. It is rumored and assumed to be related to his on stream rant about his trip to Rotterdam and subsequent allegations about other individuals in the League of Legends community.

Feel free to use this thread to send your condolences as we return his Twitch channel and streaming career to the earth. Ashes to ashes, dust to dust.

Proof: www.twitch.tv/grossie_gore

Gross Gore's first comment on the matter

"I have been banned on Twitch.TV I have no real answers or anything at this moment.. I'll keep you all updated. Very upset, I don't know what to say."

Gross Gore's second comment on the matter

"I have been PERMANENTLY banned from streaming on Twitch.TV for "harassment. It's 100% confirmed.

I don't know what to say/what to do from here...

My life is ruined. Everything is ruined, Everything I did, is ruined.

I fucked up, my life is destroyed...

& this is how it ends."

Really shitty news to be honest. He's legitimately a good guy who's all about his viewers; sure his stream is full of trolls and drama but he should be free to say whatever the fuck he wants. I get what you mean. But I'm pretty sure it's because of the Krepo thing. him sleeping with a 15 year old. I can almost guarantee that Riot said something to Twitch about banning Gross Gore.

:D - April 19, 2016, 10:41 pm

he was warned twice before. Either way Riot probably had some say in this. Doubt it'll last long and even if it does he can just stream on YT or Hitbox or something. His followers would watch him there.

That's rather unfortunate and he made a Facebook video talking about how he fucked up and doesn't really want to live anymore after this.

He looks like he's suicidal at the moment.

It's understandable considering the opportunity he just threw away.

Twitch and their TOS are strict and firm, they're not going to give him another chance, if this were just a grey-area minor confusion of harassment they might consider it, but the topic he was going on about was just right down slander and very harmful to the other persons reputation.

Why you have to tread carefully when you're considered to be at a professional level on anything. The benefits get better, but the rope you walk gets thinner and the floor only gets smaller.

He was addressing rumors about himself and defending himself, but after he cleared everything up he started targeting the other person.

From my understanding there was never any evidence all this was true, just rumors everybody had heard and he jumped the gun after defending himself and went on to actually slander him and that tied the noose around his neck.

Not saying it wasn't unjustified, but he gave the definition of slander down to a T and that's what got him.

I can't find any of the extended flaming, mostly him defending himself, but there was more after this that got him in trouble, you can sorta hear him trailing off into it at the end of the video.

Can't say I blame Twitch too much after watching it again, nobody wants a bunch of drama about who raped who, especially if it's about underage people.

It's just childish at that point and completely unnecessary and bad for Twitch's image.

Get that he was mad, but tempers have been known to burn down entire cities and they've been the fall of many.

Sucks for him, hope he finds an alternative, everyone is trying to say he's going to kill himself now if he can't work out something with Twitch, which is very unlikely I'd say.

Well in terms of Twitch, rules are rules and he's had more than a couple warnings in the past. The icing on the cake was the talk about rape and underage girls, that's just bad business for everyone.

He seemed sincere and sad that he fucked up though, which I guess everyone is after they get in trouble.

Realistically from a business perspective I know they probably won't unless the public outcry breaks down their doors.

He even mentioned he had a Skype call with someone from Twitch who told him over and over after he begged that they didn't want him on the site anymore at all and that it was simply over.

I mean, someone here on HF should start up a stream service where it's 100% up to each user what they want to do.

Easy as- Each streamer streams what they want, they can send out their private stream link or be listed in the category page.

Like hey, My stream link is StreamsRus.com/980290

Then one day when they reach enough viewers or some shit, their username will become their / like StreamRus.com/MrRobot

Then when they reach that day, it will be listed on the main page or they can pay a small monthly fee to be on the main page.

This allows private streams and even password lock streams.

Sodapoppin showed a fucking gun on stream, harassing other members constantly sleeps on stream and gets money for it.

Still, he won't get any warnings or bans. I like Sodapoppin, don't get me wrong, but this was unfair on Larsen.

He didn't get any temporary ban, just a permanent one, so unfair.

It could work, although most these streamers are afraid of having to start over again.

So it would most likely be bigger with people trying to stream illegal/explicit or off-topic streams.

Yeah. I think riot had something to do with the ban. Most likely because he slandered a Riot Employee. Watching the video from Gross Gore he really seems sad about it. maybe even depressed. Somone even called the cops on him because they thought he was suicidal. If he gets unbanned (which i hope.) he will have lost quite a bit of fans. But true fans will still be there for him. It's not just he's job. It's he's dream job. He has also helped alot of people through tough times. I really hope twitch gives him another chance. Reduce the ban to a 3-6month ban. If he ever does it against. No mercy. Perma ban.

I don't understand this fucking mindset to protect "popular" individuals.

1) he's been warned twice for previous twitch violations.

2) he fucking accused someone of rape/paedophilia - that's a serious accusation and in my opinion it deserves a LOT worse than a ban on a streaming site. You shouldn't give a fuck whether that's his dream job or not, anyone (especially a popular person who has a large following) who accuses someone of something that serious needs to have legal action involved with it. Whether or not Krepo did what GG accused him of doing is irrelevant and beyond the point.

There's a huge ass difference between faking cancer and accusing someone of rape. Holy shit guys do you think for even a second before you post? First, faking cancer is only for one individual and is only for donations (yes should be banned but hold on). Accusing someone of rape can literally fuck their life over if enough people believe it. He deserves worse because worst case scenario, someone crazy actually goes after krepo because they think he raped someone under age. If you can't see the difference between those two things you are an idiot.

little dragon - April 26, 2016, 11:37 pm

Krepo has stated on his Twitter that he never accused GG of rape or attempted rape, and I'm inclined to believe him.

As far as the ban goes -- there's really no excuse for his behaviour. I too think Riot probably does have something to do with the length of it, but he should know that when he slanders a Riot employee, he's kind of looking a gift horse right in the mouth and just asking to have his head bitten off. He has a LOT of fans and followers, at least some of whom likely put a lot of stake into what he says. He has a platform from which he broadcasts to tens of thousands of people in the League community, and he ultimately used it to proliferate the rumour that a prominent Riot shoutcaster committed statutory rape (which, as it turns out, has no basis in fact). That kind of bullshit can destroy someone's life if it catches on. It's not acceptable, and he got what he deserved, especially given he'd been warned previously for breaking the ToS.

Like others have said, too, there's nothing stopping him from moving to a different platform, and I honestly believe that's exactly what he'll do once all the initial drama has died down. His apology video seemed pretty genuine and I have no doubt that he's sorry for what he said, but what's done is done.

ETA: PREACH Corios, there's a huge difference between lying about your own circumstances and slandering others.

I think it's all a show, yes I know him getting banned is real and he's probably very sad and depressed about it, but I think partially through it he figured out he could milk his viewer's sympathy, give it a bit he will come back with something.

Honestly I think he talked that trash in the first place because he was pissed about hearing that most LCS players didn't like him AND because Febiven fucked "his girl" while they were on a trip out to where he was. He should have just shut his mouth before he got to that point lol

I just watched the Full Story of Rotterdam video, he was LOSING HIS SHIT because Febiven slept with a girl he liked and then near the end he starts going on about rumours being spread about him attempting to rape some girl which, like I said, Krepo apparently never said anything about. That leads into him saying Krepo slept with a 15 year old and telling Krepo not to "mess with him" :| Hella cringe. He also went on a vaguely misogynistic rant about how slutty women are which just erased any minuscule potential there was of me having sympathy for him lol

Personally I find Ali to be very funny and entertaining - certainly funnier than some of the streamers who dress up in ridiculous outfits or have their cleavage out for 12 year old fans.

Ali's fanbase might be somewhat different and strange, but you can see he cares about what he does and is doing a lot more to change for the sake of Twitch, and also for the child he will be bringing up when it is born.
