Quote:Since 1973, an invasion of aliens upon Earth known as BETA has driven human civilization to destruction. In order to defend themselves from this enormous mass of enemy force, mankind has developed large humanoid arms called Tactical Surface Fighters and deployed them to its defense lines through out the world. However, its efforts could only slow down the impending defeat, and mankind has been forced to abandon the major areas of the Eurasian Continent. For 30 years, they have been caught in an endless war against BETA without any hopes of victory.

Now in 2001, Imperial Japan faces difficulties in the development of the next-generation of Tactical Surface Fighters (TSF) as it defends the front lines of the Far East. The UN has proposed a joint development program between Imperial Japan and the United States as a part of its TSF international mutual development unit, the Prominence Project.

Yui Takamura (a surface pilot of the Imperial Royal Guards of Japan) is given the responsibility of the project and sets off to Alaska. Meanwhile, Yuya Bridges, also a surface pilot of the US Army, heads to the same destination.

They never had any idea just how drastically their encounter would change their fates.

This story of internal dilemma takes place during the development of the new Tactical Surface Fighters, the most crucial and effective weapons against BETA. And this time, the stakes are much higher than a handful of lives and our sanity.

All we can do is fight.

Another one underrated good mecha Anime. If you're looking for Mecha Anime that is as close to reality as possible (so machines not alimented by super-power, actually destructible, etc.), then it's a good watch. Loved it. I wasn't attracted AT ALL to Mecha Anime at first, but these ones are just too good.

I don't really like the old art style of anime but I might give it a chance.

I'm retarded and saw the date that the anime takes place during and thought that was when it was released. I'll most likely watch it now.

I play to watch it one day only thing turning me off slightly is that it isn't the first of it's series and there hasn't been a anime adaptation of the first of its series aparently they just skipped adapting the VNS into the series in order. Swharzenmarken or whatever is also from the series I watched a few episodes; liked it quite a bit didn't have to time to complete it at the time plan to complete it though.

Which Manga are you referring to?

It's based on a whole visual novel series like 7 of them starting in 2003 none of them have been adapted into anime. Unless alternative was a vn. But still that was only an alternate storyline not the main storyline ; which would be like the first VN and a few of the following ones I believe. Funny fact: some of the characters in the series are the same as the ones from kimi GA einz (rumbling hearts) same author so they look identitically to the two girls Haruka and mitsiku
