Thread: ShareX - Open source screen capture, file sharing and productivity tool

Jaex - May 13, 2016, 4:55 pm

Hi, I'm developer of open source software ShareX which I'm working actively on it last 8 years.

It is basically screen capture/recording and sharing software, but also it can upload images, text and files to hosts which you can select from 80+ destinations or even your own host with FTP or custom uploader support.

I don't want to write all features here because mainly people won't like reading wall of text and ShareX have long list of features but if you like to see more detailed list you can check here: <https://getsharex.com/features/>

Screenshot from main window:

If you would like to try it:

Website of ShareX: <https://getsharex.com>

Project page: <https://github.com/ShareX/ShareX>

I would like to get your opinions and feedback about my software. If you have any questions please let me know.

Excellent program, I recommend it for my service. This reminds me to send a pull request for my custom uploader.

Is it available for non-botnet OS (Linux)?

Daddy???????????? - May 16, 2016, 6:39 pm

Love the tool; I use it pretty much every day. After a friend of mine who is friends with you on Steam had shown me how easy it was to use, I knew I had to switch over from using Gyazo.

Hyperdesktop was not from Imgur.

ShareX is insanely good and useful. I've used various browser extensions, puush, gyazo and many other programs, but nothing comes close to ShareX. I love the fact that I can censor any information or make a pointer while taking the screenshot. I keybinded different features I use, and everything works very, very nice.

I do have a few recommendations, though. Both of these were picked up from the Imgur Extension by Metronomik:

Make it possible to capture a full page in a browser. This means that it auto-scrolls and captures the entire page into one single image.

Could you make picture reuploads happen? On the extension, all I had to do to reupload something to Imgur was Right Click -> Reupload. It was very useful.

You can use the extension to get an idea of how it works.

Keep up the good work.

Both of your recommendations involves using browser extension and I'm not web developer therefore unable to make them.

But software itself can handle what you want. For full page capture ShareX have both scrolling capture and web page capture support.

And for reupload, you can use ShareX chrome extension or copy image from website and then use "Clipboard upload" hotkey.

I've been using it for a quite a long time now. Is the GIF uploading to IMGUR an option still or has it been removed? Keep up the good work, great software you have going.

It is not removed. But Imgur API have 10mb upload limit when their web site have more higher limit therefore it can be problem to upload big gifs.
