Thread: How to get your facebook friends emails.\(and hack them\)

Mr. Robot - June 28, 2016, 4:52 pm

The easiest way - usually works but occasionally doesn't on some people (unsure as to why, not going to look into it but if you know feel free to post why below and I'll quote you up here.)

-didn't see a tutorial, a proper one around and people keep asking me about it.

Side note - to easily see your skype contacts information and sometimes email you can use <https://people.live.com/>

Head to yahoo.com

<https://login.yahoo.com/>

Make an account.

Once signed in click on this button... (the contacts button)

Then on the right hand side, mine wont load right now for an image so if someone can screenshot that too- cheers.

There will be a facebook icon and it will say "Import contacts from facebook"

Hit that and voila, login/connect your facebook and your friends emails will be visible.

Mine looks like this right now.

Then of course head to somewhere like leakbase or another databases website - search all your friends emails and get their passwords.

(most are down over time, try weleakinfo.com)

Thanks to the user i420 for linking this video.

This would also work on my windows phone, all my facebook friends would go into the contacts tab, so they would be in my contacts without phone number, but it would show their emails.

Was a bit annoying it merged FB contacts with my phone contacts.

Absolutely and they get overlooked by some people to the point that they become forgotten.

Well now you can do it this way - hopefully it works in your favor without fucking your contacts up :)

Not too sure but I don't think that's the case as I managed to pull a number of hacked facebook accounts friends lists even if they had a mobile number.

Or do you mean only a mobile number?

75% of the contacts imported do not have an email address attached.
Why is that?

r421x0 - August 7, 2016, 4:41 am

I asked Facebook and...

Hi *****,

There's a difference between the privacy setting for an email address and whether it's visible on someone's timeline. See <https://www.facebook.com/help/359369650815737/> for some more info on this.

The privacy setting controls whether a person's email address will be accessible in other interfaces or contact syncs, regardless of whether it's hidden from or doesn't appear on their timeline. This is a common source of false positives, and I know it can seem rather confusing. If you test and discover that the actual privacy setting is being overridden, please let us know.

No. The fact you know what a phishing page is and then think yahoo is one is kinda disturbing. Maybe stay away from this sort of thing until you learn basic terminology.

This is very good. Before you were able to do this with hotmail but they blocked this.

Now u can do it with ymail and u can hack accounts in this way.

U grab friends email list and check if their hotmail.com accounts expired.

If yes just create same emails and restart passwords. Boom you are in acc .

I remember something like this used to be done on Hotmail.

Basically you connect with facebook and all of your friends e-mails show up.

The better thing was that you could get a list of your friends whose e-mail got deleted as they didn't log in for a long time.

And you could make their e-mail and reset their password. Probably works on yahoo as well, although not sure you can see those inactive e-mails.
