I work for myself with Snapchat, and I love it. I don't like working for people, but I love my job right now.

Over here get money at 14, and I am over here trying to get $20, willing to suck a homeless guy off.

Any ways, I love my job, because I don't have a job.

Well I work at an accounting firm doing co-op right now. Although I can't say I like the work, the people I work with are great, starting to get close with a girl there who I like, great pay which let's me enjoy my life outside of work very much.

Thing is I can't stand working for someone else. I intend to save up money, and launch a business idea I've been working on for a couple of months now, and hopefully just be able to get that running to a full time thing. I get what you mean about society sucking, but looking at the world with that kind of pessimistic attitude will get you nowhere. I went through the same phase, where everything seemed pointless because you'd end up hating yourself and what you've become, and the only way out of that feeling is to decide you aren't going to live that way forever, and make plans on getting yourself out of that situation.

Sorry for the long post :c

There is hardly anyone who enjoys their job. To even be considered a job, such activity should take some major effort and we are all a bit lazy so noone truly loves their job. Well, some do but it is the first few months at most.
