Synopsis

Sorey is a human youth who grew up among the seraphim, spiritual beings not visible to humans. Sorey believes in the folklore that says "long ago, every human was able to see the seraphim" and dreams of unraveling the ancient mystery to make the world a place where people and seraphim can live together in peace.

One day, Sorey visits the human capital for the very first time. He becomes embroiled in an incident during which he pulls out a holy sword embedded in a rock and ends up becoming a Shepherd, one who casts away calamity from the world. He begins to realize the gravity of his mission, and his dream of coexistence between mankind and the seraphim becomes more intense—

And thus, the Shepherd embarks on an amazing journey with his companions.

1st ep was prologue and completely unrelated to the summary given for this but its surely top notch with out the box plot and good enough killer art.

Might not watch the first episode given what I've heard, but I have high hopes for this.

Alright so.

10/10 art style and fight scenes, it's ufotable after all.

However... what the fuck went south with that story-telling? I swear, that's the biggest downside of this Anime and if it had been better, it would have been as good as the Fate series.

Well I mean it's a game (rpg) so maybe that's why it was like that? idk

I'm not going to watch this until season two is released and completed.

Probably... Even there, it just doesn't make sense. Episode 5 and 6 being the most random as well.

Didn't even know there was a S2 (looks like it has been confirmed for 2017). Shit, I should have waited then.

Am posting this here to keep as a reminder, art looks well done but iffy concerning the plot/etc as Aura pointed out.
