Thread: Benefits to being rep killed.

Wakka - July 17, 2016, 4:58 am

At first I was angry that I was rep killed, but I've actually found that it's not so bad.

There are actually some benefits to being rep killed:

You learn your lesson early on, that way you don't loose large amounts of reputation in the future.

All of your negative/neutral reputations are grouped together and appear only on your first page.

You take more notice of policies and site rules which in turn leads to less time banned.

You can help other people not make the same mistakes you did.

You can change the context of your reputations, instead of having random positives you can try to only structure your reputation based on market place deals.

So yeah I'm not even pissed any more, and I've learnt my lesson I guess. Also I would advise everyone not to stick your nose in where it doesn't involve you or try to involve others in your shit.

Ha Ha very funny.

And no, I'm happy with my pokeball thank you very much.

You shouldn't have to be rep killed in order to actually read the rules. I normally read the rules once or twice a month, to keep updated on them.

These are some retarded reasons to claim a rep kill as beneficial.

Arrogance - July 17, 2016, 5:05 am

And to think this was known as repfuck instead of rekill, I'm getting old..

And you probably made this thread to get sympathy from people. That's just my POV.

Time to rekill you for this post. Atleast you have a positive outlook towards it so it won't happen again.

You: "good morning mother"

Mom: "morning son! What are you up to?"

You: "it's that time of the month!"

Mom: "what time?"

You: "time to get a fucking watch time to read the rules of hackforums!"

Mom: "fucking oath stay safe"

Yeah, a lot of user groups was either sold, or re-branded into different names. A lot of things have been changing over the last few months. ?

Me neither... Groups are utter trash right now. Miss the infamous days all the groups were good then. Instinct ?

You always learn from your mistakes. It takes being RKO sometimes to see it.
