Quote:By the 71st year of the True Calendar, humanity has expanded its reach to the stars. The nations of JIOR, ARUS, and Dorssia have set up colonies made of individual modules in space, each serving to house more than half of mankind. Yet, war is still being waged between ARUS and Dorssia, each looking for a way to break the stalemate in their favor, and the key to victory happens to be nestled within a lone JIOR-controlled module.

Kakumeiki Valvrave opens with an average day in the life of Haruto Tokishima being turned upside down as Dorssia launches an invasion of the Sakimori Academy, hoping to claim the secret weapons that lay hidden within it—the powerful combat machines known as the Valvraves. To liberate their home, Haruto and four others sacrifice their humanity and bear the curse of the Valvraves, becoming undying immortals that can steal the body of others. Together, with the aid of L-elf, a genius-strategist and traitor to Dorssia, they'll spark a revolution that will change the world.

I wanted to watch a good Mecha Anime for a while and it was the highest ranked one of all the ones I had on my PTW list so I picked it. It was good, though there were a lot of cringe worthy moment and I felt like the end was a bit rushed. Some events weren't given enough importance as well which pissed me off a bit but... Oh well, I watched it and I enjoyed it. Now I can cross it off my list.

Hm, I might take a look into it, haven't really watched a good mecha since Aldnoah.Zero came out.

Illuminati is going to hate me for saying this, but A.Z is absolute trash compared to this show. js

It's really fucking good. And I don't say this a lot.

- Nice mecha
  - Basically super robos
  - Some amazing girls
  - Managed to put some comedy in there without ruining the show
  - T.M. effing Revolution
- etc etc

Wow, I managed to impress Senpai, I'm glad.

Why did you decide to watch it?

Someone on MAL in all caps messaged me to watch it, said it was like Gundam Seed (which it sorta was) and that's some good shit.

Oh, Angel also told me a while ago to watch it just never got around to it. But finally did.

I still prefer A.Z to it though. I think I watched it because I was in my A.Z phase and wanted to watch a shitload of mechas like it.

Valrave was one of my favorite anime/mecha. The plot and mechanics of how it works is insane. It's basically a vampire mecha. It gets so lit
