Clegane - August 15, 2016, 3:23 am

You can buy a house with BTC, I remember seeing a post about it somewhere, and literally I would just invest like $10k into making some online business that LOOKS successful, then transfer like $5k every week to my paypal account from the BTC through currency exchange, and withdraw to bank. after first month I ramp it up to 10k a week and so on till I have shit tons of money irl and I can do whatever

King??? - August 15, 2016, 3:23 am

"I mean, you can't go buy a house with BTC transfer, many questions will be asked. You'd have to do a lot of things in the black market."

Why? Have we stolen this £100m?

If we haven't stolen it and it's just accidentally come to me... It's legitimate money.

I'd use my own money, + the BTC money here and there to start own companies, to then slowly launder the BTC into legitimately owned dollhairs.

If the owner sent it by accident its his own fault. Nothing he can do about it

Have you seen the "giveaway" of the guy that stole millions of BTC? That's definitely laundering money for himself.

VeloCityMods - August 15, 2016, 3:29 am

It's legitment money, i would transfer it to my coinbase/ circle account about 20mill so i have 80mill in BTC, do a shit load of giveaways, give back to HF. + Buy my parents a house and my grandparents and wouldn't work when i'm older.

If you get sent a bill from lets say your phone company. And you add an extra 0 at the end of the value, the company Automatically sends the money you didnt have to pay back to your bank account.

Its the right moral thing to do, so would it be in this situation.
Ofcourse greed comes into play, but ethically it is not right to keep the money.
Neither would government(s) allow this, or allow you to withdraw the BTC to your Bank and buy a house..Car etc with it.

As it would be suspicious illegal money.

Wrong.

A phone company will do that because it's the law. They HAVE to do that.

The government will not in any sort of 0% chance, nada, nothing, ZERO, get involved. It is absolutely nothing to do with them.

And as you know, you don't "withdraw BTC to your bank", you have to get it exchanged. Now that process might take a while, but still nothing illegal.

1) Its irreversible, yea not if the person the money was sent to refunds it to the original wallet adress.

2) Im talking about authorities, goodluck cashing that sucker out. (Obviously with cashing out i mean exchanging it ???)

I hope you do realise, that if you live a normal life and have a normal wage.
Work all the time to get arround, pay bills save a little here and there to buy urself something nice / vacation..

IF you would get sent 100M in bitcoin, you decide to take things a little more easy, perhaps working part time or even quitting or even if you'd keep the job and decide to buy a new laundry machine, tv, sofa , king size bed and some other shit within x ammount of time. It would not add up, and sure some one could have died in your family who left you money.. But if you go out and all of the sudden buy a new car, and other expenses that you earlier could not make up for. Then where is this money coming from?

Before you know it, you're going to have your bank statements checked and your house searched.

Breaking bad IRL?

Skumzy - August 15, 2016, 3:39 am

I'm not extremely experienced with BTC and other cryptocurrency, but I'd probably just exchange as much as I could with trusted members and slowly spend it all. It would suck since it'd take a long time to get anything extremely expensive, but at least it would be safe and probably a good deterrent to wasting all the money at once.

There's no legal law stating that you'd have to give it back. Assuming you transferred it all and went to spend it the only thing you'd need to do is pay taxes and file it. It's not illegal if you pay your taxes, and then no questions will be asked. It's an easy fix.

I'm saying if you exchange it all yes questions will be asked. Firstly no legal troubles assuming you payed your taxes. For all the government knows you found the lost city of fucking Atlantis and sold gold to a Mexican hitch hiker. They're going to ask how you got it sure. Say Bitcoin investing if you want. It's not illegal.

As long as you payed taxes your bank really wont give a shit. They might freeze you because it's considered suspicious activity or such a large sum. Face to face verification will fix that easily.

Then what? The governments going to freeze and seize your $100m that you payed taxes on? On what grounds?

If you payed taxes there's nothing illegal. They can suspect you made it illegally all they want. Until they get proof there's nothing they can do.

Thanks everyone for discussing about the is it illegal to keep the money or not

Let's make 2 situations, 1 where you can use the money legally as long as you pay the taxes and 1 situation where you can't

Who would you tell about this? Would you brag to all of your friends or just keep it shut and keep it to your family only?

Then what? The governments going to freeze and seize your $100m that you payed taxes on? On what grounds?

If you payed taxes there's nothing illegal. They can suspect you made it illegally all they want. Until they get proof there's nothing they can do.

Here if you deposit over 7000€ at once, or lets say you buy a second hand car at a dealer and pay 7K+ cash, the bank or the car dealer is forced to call in and get the cops to wait you up outside.

Here it is prohibited by LAW to pay with ammounts bigger than 7 grand, or Accept payments of 7 grand + in cash.

They could propably seize it because its illicit money. That you have no proof of how it was achieved, you have no paycheck from your employee saying you got a wage raise to 100M, neither has your family member died who was rich AF and left you 100M behind.

If you get to receive such large sum of money, there has to be a proper way to say, okay i see he got that money because he sold this, and worked here and this and this.. it obviously doesnt make sense if you're suddenly 100M wealthier, neither do you have anything decent of an explanation to base yourself up if they do question you.

Because again, " i woke up with it " is not a valid explanation.

Sure they have no proof, but neither do you. And in the end of they day they are the Authorities.

It might be the truthful explanation, but even if you'd say this to a close friend he would look at you funny and say yeah nice joke.

No one will believe that, and as it's a crypto currency for one you could be Kevin Mitnick #2 who stole all that money, created another BTC address to then tumble it to a legit wallet address. And claim you "woke up to it"

It's not about receiving the money, it's about spending it. You can not just spend the $100 million without at least knowing what the $100 million was sent for.

It can't be that if you just pay taxes all will be fine & you'll live a regular life.

Sure there will be questions, but there is absolutely no precedent for them to not allow you to keep/spend the money.

BUT this is all going by the wording of the OP. If the money honestly landed in your account without you knowing where it came from, you would not be REQUIRED to return it.

If you want to test the theory... Send £50 to a random BTC address and try to get that money back, or even try to get the receiver in trouble. It won't happen.

Thats not what its about, theres no way as sender to get it back, that is true and common sense.

But its not about 50 pound but $100M, No one will notice 50 Pound, Not if you plan on exchanging it and not if you put it on your bank account / spend it.

If you plan to exchange that 100M, even within 10 years of time using monthly transactions of smaller ammounts, the ammount would still be big and not only that, but would the ammounts add up, If you exchange 7K $ From BTC into your bank account,multiple times in X ammount of time, be sure that would be noticed. And certainly if you plan on spending that money. Was actually discussing this very topic yesterday with a friend.

Exact scenario was that the bitfinex hacker accidentally sent the coins to an address cached in his multibit wallet as a sent address instead of his own, hence sending the coins to somebody else.

Honestly I don't know, as I've experienced something like this in the past, only with a far lesser amount of cash, and I instantly spent it all regretfully.

Whatever I'd decide to do with it spending it would be at the bottom of my list essentially.

I was just going by your statement of

"I personally don't think it'll just happen when you were just living a normal life and suddenly you transfer $100M"

The lottery is done straight to your bank, the authorities don't question the £100m in this case right?

You receive £100m BTC, completely irreversible and untraceable (to a point obviously), the authorities WILL have questions, you HAVE the answers. You have NOT illegitimately obtained the money have you??? Therefore, yes there will be questions, yes you will have to pay tax, yes it will take a lot of time. BUT NO THEY WILL NOT TAKE YOUR MONEY.

No, it isn't. There is a difference between receiving it for a reason and receiving by accident.

When you win the lottery you get paid because you've WON the lottery. That's a legit reason.

As when you receive it by accident you're supposed to return it.

Okay, you can't chargeback on BTC but that doesn't mean you can't copy the BTC address & send the money back.

It's either that or you're going to do some blackhat shit the next months & you've got to seem like a regular dude while doing it.

No.

You are using half my post and then taking a sentence out of it and then twisting it to make it kind of sound like what you want to say. - Just because the lottery winners pay tax, that somehow invalidates everything I've said....

EDIT: In fact, reading back, I didn't even mention taxing of lottery winnings, so I have no clue what you are even talking about now.

Anyway..

"As when you receive it by accident you're supposed to return it."

As a human, you're "supposed to return it". By law you are not required to (BTC).

"Okay, you can't chargeback on BTC but that doesn't mean you can't copy the BTC address & send

Of course you CAN, but there is no REQUIREMENT

"It's either that or you're going to do some blackhat shit the next months & you've got to seem like a regular dude."

Or once again, for the nth time today, we come back to the fact that you have NOT received the funds illegally and therefore you do not need to treat the funds as illegal funds!

Refer back to the post about getting an accountant, that is how you legitimize the funds to the authorities, to CONFIRM that the funds are legal. As in every instance, the funds are legal.

Or once again, for the nth time today, we come back to the fact that you have NOT received the funds illegally and therefore you do not need to treat the funds as illegal funds! You don't seem to realize that a lottery winner gets a certificate where it says yes he won this amount, and this was tax & this % was lottery fee, he legitimately won the money. No one will ask questions as it's a valid reason of receiving the 100M$, by winning the lottery.

But

In the case of OP, the bitcoins were sent to him by accident, the person (OP) who received this payment has nothing to prove that it is legitimately achieved.

And as you were saying earlier, if the 100M was sent to his bank account, he'd be in some bad luck because he'd get questioned instantly and would not be able to use that money as it will be taken away.

Now the clue of the entire situation.

The money is sent as a crypto currency, which is " untraceable " or at least semi-untraceable, so no one will be able to file a complaint of accidentally sending the money to a wrong account. Neither would any one notice these bitcoins if you keep them in BTC form, The thing is tho, if you want this 100M $ BTC into your bank, or cash or anywhere to spend it on lets say a house or car or anything big in ammount you would have to launder it, which would make your as you say " LEGAL " money into not so legal money.

Because in the end it wasn't that legal after all, because if this exact scenario happened using bank accounts, you would not have a single dollar left of that entire 100M$ stack.

So, my conclusion Crypto currency hides the money from sight of the public, which would make the 100M$ bitcoin itself unnoticeable, but exchanging that money into "real" money would require semi illegal activities.

25+- Million in BTC

1 million random stuff.

3 Million give aways in total on HF.

1 million for the biggest party ever, with lot of drugs.

40 million to charity

20 million to friends and family

9 million ..? another give away???

This is just to much money.. I don't even want so much.. just want enough so i can buy everything that i want (i'm not some 1 who needs a lot) and that is it.

Maybe I even sent 80%+ back.

That just sounds weird. Only save 1%? 1 million isn't that much, if you get a decent job you make that pretty fast. I'd save at least 50.

I guess. I could understand if someone didn't want the money, but he wanted to "just buy everything I want." It's stupid as hell to send the money back after that, would def regret it after a very short amount of time.

That being said you may be investigated, and if you are doing other actually illegal stuff you may get in trouble for those things.

SIM-2223238 - September 17, 2016, 9:55 am

I'd buy every HF member a dildo so they can go fuck themselves.

TheChi?f - September 17, 2016, 9:56 am

I would honestly gamble a shit ton of it and crash bustabit

Mongu - September 17, 2016, 10:03 am

Take out and use in trading, investing etc.

Mizzy - September 17, 2016, 11:35 am

If i can return it i will , but not all i will take some.

Cha0 - September 17, 2016, 11:36 am

Start a business, slowly launder it of course.

DaUB3R - September 17, 2016, 11:46 am

I'll buy TOR and everything on it.

I'd be smart, convert it to real cash, hire an accountant and a few solicitors. Start investing my money into some really nice homes. Once i have everything sorted i'll rent out the homes and start making back my investment. After a few years i should have more money then i started with.

If we haven't stolen it and it's just accidentally come to me... It's legitimate money.
Say if the sender stole it from fraud and accidentally sends it to you, the police will still take it because it's stolen money to begin with.

Black market? All you have to do is buy physical items with your BTC such as phones or consoles and resell them for real money. Simple.

#Doge - October 30, 2016, 8:08 am

I'll invest a lot on online businesses and cashout 1 million in a span of a year.
I'll also probably get ewhored multiple times but I'll enjoy it.

2. Host weekly upgrades for the community
3. Start various online websites to generate revenue
4. Invest in various crypto currencies
5. Keep that shit crypto and don't report it to the IRS ?

White Hat - October 30, 2016, 6:57 pm

Buy gold, get bank account in third world country.. sell gold and place some money in bank account, i also invest, open up small companies, or i could just leave it all as gold and tell irs to fuck off when i declare it às investment earnings.

2k into awards on HF

4 mill into a private wallet on a new desktop.

Exchange a lot of it for PP then to the bank

Try to get a five grand through local BTC and fuck around with the rest I suppose

Exchanging it to pp would be dumb since they will ask you questions + there is no exchanger who will send you 1M or so so this would take a VERY long time

I'd exchange this shit and go travel the world because I've always wanted to go to exotic places.

Gulddreng - November 1, 2016, 12:57 pm

If the money weren't fraud, I'd contact a big company who can get it exchanged for me. But if the money were fraud, I'd anonymously contact someone who is experienced with BTC, exchanging and the deep web and then I'll ask for their advice.

Once I successfully get the money exchanged, I'll save 5% of it on a saving account in case anything happens. The rest of the money will be used for investments, business, family, and stuff for myself.

Sell it in small increments to Coinbase daily. Eventually, purchase some nice clothes, a nice car I can use as a daily driver, send some to my parents, donate quite a bit to my family and some charities, and just invest in low-risk stocks.

Live my life in peace and just be the same I am right now with the mindset knowing I can go out for dinner tomorrow night and not worry about paying for gas or getting my girlfriend presents for the next week.
