Thread: BTC Debit Card

Soulmate~?? - September 5, 2016, 1:05 pm

I have been thinking about getting a physical Bitcoin debit card for quite some time and I would like to know which one is the best, cheapest, or most secure. Also, if you have a BTC debit card, or with any other cryptocurrency share your experiences with it and let me know which one.

I was thinking about converting my wallet to cryptopay and getting a debit card from there since it is only $15, but they currently don't ship to Canada so I'm looking for other options which have a cheap physical card cost as well as low fees.

I don't think this would be disallowed, but since it's talking about debit cards let me know if it is.

EDIT: Since everyone is asking this is the link I used to buy my VCC which was $2.5 and it's working great so far.

<https://cryptopay.me/bitcoin-debit-card>

EDIT 2: If you make a Cryptopay account, make sure you enable 2FA because your login is just your email + pass.

Wait, a BTC debit card? What is it and how does it work?

Secrets - September 5, 2016, 6:59 pm

I would imagine they would set it up like money network cards etc. Going to look into that though interesting.

Same way as any other debit card, you put funds on it and you can use it anywhere.

I bought a Bitcoin VCC for $2.5 a few minutes ago and it literally works like any other CC/DC at checkout so I'll definitely be using Cryptopay now

You can use it as any debit card you have. It's also a VISA, so it can be used as a visa. (Debit Visa, in other words.)

I have tried the e-coin.io (now called Wirex) before and it was awesome!

I have heard of the Xapo one, will try it soon.

So I link my wallet to the card? Let's say I go to buy McDonald's. I can use that btc card, and it'll take funds out of my wallet?

I'm not sure how much the other ones are, but the Cryptopay physical card is $15

You have to add the bitcoin to your card. (You send it to an address they give you, and then you click on deposit after X confirms (6 confirms with the e-coin/wirex one).

E-Coin: e-coin.io / <https://wirexapp.com/> (They have changed from ecoin to wirex)

You have to load the card from your wallet, and there's like a .20 fee for $30 or something, and you can withdraw back into your BTC wallet or cash out as well.

If you have around $50 to $100 in BTC I think it would be a good investment to buy the Cryptopay one, but you have to send it from your main wallet into that one, then purchase the Debit Card, and finally load it with funds again.

I use AdvCash too and I can really recommend it. Albeit there is a 5% hidden fee when depositing Bitcoin directly (I looked through some of the source code and it said Bitstamp+5%), but if you deposit it through e.g. BTC-E (when the exchange rate is favorable) then it's no problem. I'm surprised it says the cards have low anonymity, I have spoken to the owner and he's assured me that there's no reporting of any transactions you do, nor does any government whatsoever get informed that you have said cards in your name, only if they're subpoenaed. He also assured me that you can register cards in fictitious names and up to 5 per household without him batting an eye. Also, it's the best cards available period, without any verification whatsoever you can withdrawal $2.5K/mo on each of these cards. You can get both EUR and USD card and the limit is per card not per account, on a single household you could have a total of 10 cards and withdrawal $25K/mo without any verification whatsoever.

I am curious as to why you don't get a normal debit card and just deposit money on it from PayPal, and sell your BTC for PayPal? BTC is worth more then $, so unless your stores are going to discount you it seems like a waste imo.

What I usually do is whenever I get PP for a transaction I deposit it in my bank account and whenever I get BTC I hold it in the VCC or DC. It's more anonymous and there's no ID verification or anything so everyone can get one. A lot of people on HF are too young to get their own bank account and get a real card.

Awesome thread. Thanks for the shares everyone! I'll be checking the options out. I'm still undecided between physical or virtual.
