All of you wanting to check, here is the attack list that mr krebs has ahold of so you can check for your shit in there...

if you are worried you are in this, let me know, I'll scan the file for your alias etc.

m4dh4ck3r - September 10, 2016, 1:00 am

The way he has stored the logs though .

J?son - September 10, 2016, 1:01 am

I would delete this, you can't post a HF member's personal info.

Lor?d - September 10, 2016, 1:01 am

I like how he claims it's a huge file.

It's not even a gig.

Doesn't seem that big to me.

Cause it's only 6 months worth.

Frukt - September 10, 2016, 1:04 am

I found AppleJ4ck's IP on that log, lmao.

That was a very organized log man, holy shit.

it's a .txt document of launched ddos attacks. That's a pretty big file all things considered.

@OP I didn't bother downloading, is this Krebs' release?

<https://www.cloudflare.com/media/krebs/attacks.txt.zip> ?

Found it interesting Cloudflare is hosting that file themselves.

I would assume it is the same one.

Nothing, the FBI don't care about the customers and the operators are comfortably out of reach in Israel.

Nothing at all. He's trying to shame these people.

Now if one of you wants to make money just start doxing a bunch of people on the list and then make a website containing their dox + the list of attacks they sent

then charge for removals

Autist - September 10, 2016, 11:36 am

My IP is actually in there XD Have a new ip tho

The file is 27mbs, over a million attacks have been sent in that log, no way people are gonna get arrested

To be fair I think you underestimate how easy it is to take that data and simply assign it to profiles that I'm sure already exist on most people and say "okay well here's more shit on him"

SUI-3183372 - September 10, 2016, 1:30 pm

Here is the complete list of users who launched attacks during that time frame with duplicates removed. Got about 1,650 users here. Glad to see the individual who has been using my alias to sign up for hacking sites and booters while I was in prison is not a user of this one. (Speaking of which, do any of you know who owns the domain panic.pl? That fuck is spamming malware in emails with my alias.)

[deleted]

I also made the same list with their IP's included. Going to run a script that pulls Country, State (if applicable), city and ISP info and append it to the list. Obviously can't post that here though :)
Unfortunately this list is about 15,000 lines long though because apparently IP's changed 80 times a day in China (a bunch of Chinese users have a ton of IP's).

They take an IP address, find the ISP it belongs to. Get a warrant from a federal judge. Contact ISP. Ask them who the IP belonged to on a certain date.

They don't have 'software' that just tells them, "oh, march 27th, 8:15pm, 123.123.123.123 belonged to x3XTREMEEx,"

So you dont think they will go after customers? Im thinking they will most of the people in the US

I don't think so. Booter customer's aren't all that damaging and it'd be a difficult court case to win. Prosecutors like slam dunk cases, not uphill battles. That's why when the FBI took down Blackshades, they had access to the identities of thousands of american users, but they only went after a handful of them. They went after the ones they knew that had strong cases against and could get them to plead guilty easily. That won't be the case with booters.

I think worst case scenario is they'll show up at your house, say they know what you're doing, interview you, MAYBE seize some computer hardware. However I think an arrest and/or conviction against users is rather unlikely.

This is not true. I remember when police came to my house because i had bought blackshades i barely even used it. I had to go to the station too.

You weren't charged though, correct?

They paid visits to a lot of people, over 110, but only 5 or 6 were ever formally charged. The other 110 or so people that they visited was all for the media. "We conducted investigations on 115 people in 15 different countries" sounds a lot better than "we arrested 5 people in 2 countries."

Also @OP. The list posted no longer exists, here is a pruned back up:

<http://pastebin.com/Rg1xT68V> - (Source: <https://sekure.biz/vdos-attack-logs-leaked/>)

This isn't the full list, but a condensed one that cuts out A LOT of the clutter. A new entry is created for each username anytime their IP address changed, or anytime they launched an attack on a new date.

itsMeCherry - November 18, 2016, 2:15 pm

Yeah i werent arrested because i didnt do anything. Just bought it, they said of they had evidence they would press
