Thread: 2017 BMW M4 GTS

aRuHZoNa - September 30, 2016, 9:34 pm

Hey guys, my work is rebuilding the show room and for the grand reopening we had a BMW M4 GTS delivered. I snuck upstairs and snapped a few pics of it. The MSRP is around $140,000 but since there is only 200 in the US we're rumored to be selling it for $250,000. Thought some of the car guys around here would appreciate it!

EDIT: Added that the $250k price is rumored. That's the number floating around the service department but I haven't heard a confirmed price from sales. Details like that are always rumored until it actually comes out. We also are supposed to have a decent size waiting list for the car too.

I'm a valet for the service department. I get drive plenty of M4's and other M cars throughout a week so it's a fun job.

Yeah we all agree that it isn't worth the price over. 0-60 is around 3.7 which is way too slow for a quarter mil car. Still, the rarity is where the value's at.

I've been in a Hennessey ZR1 Corvette that puts up the same stats as a GTR. There is no other comparison to going 0-60 in less than 3 seconds and feeling like time slows down when you make a pull from any mph.

That orange part? That's actually the front spoiler that goes under the car. This is just how the car is shipped straight out production with the foam holding it like that.

The body is different, it's extremely rare (1 in 200). It has a full roll cage and 3-point harnesses. Upgraded suspension and the engine is water cooled. Otherwise it is pretty similar to the M4.
