OP, you won't find 4.1 clean copy.
It's unstable anyways.

I did have 4.1, the clean version from LuckyDuck but I don't have it anymore. It was just as unstable as 4.0.

imghostin - October 26, 2016, 12:24 pm

Ive tested darktrack 4.1 indepth for abt 3 weeks, and it is really unstable. 1/3 of the functions doesnt function correctly and clients keep disappearing or just randomly dont connect. I went back to babylon in hope for the next version

It actually works perfect for me, tested every function and worked great, jus had to sort out some issues getting settings so the user connects. I think when I used dns with numbers or too long password it had issue but once it worked I've had my 5 local computers connected for a couple weeks. Imo its better than shitty paid rats that will just track you and ban your licence if you break their ToS.

I got leak mate PM for free backdoor. Joking though, any crack of netwire is 99.9999% fake, uses safengine protector, good luck anyone who even tries to reverse engineer it xD

Codefuser - October 27, 2016, 4:35 am

Cuz not everyone knows abotu safengine and safengine is expensive.

Baitable - October 27, 2016, 4:46 am

The thing is nobody is allowed to link the 4.1 since that would count as leaking and their HF account could be terminated O.o

joeing777 - October 27, 2016, 3:03 pm

Darktrack is highly unstable.

I honestly don't think this is true. I think this is a rumor so that people will still pay for RATs on HF even though darktrack has every feature any paid RAT has, except hidden RDP/inverse proxy, the later of which could be set up manually anyways. Plus it doesn't use a user login server and doesn't track everything you do.

5.0 Colorful edition will have a tracking system to prevent illegal use.

Yeah thats why you don't use 5.0, you stay with 4.0/4.1 if your intentions are illicit. Most people on HF use for illegal use, may not be what program was made for, may not be allowed, but they do.
Every post is people saying "can't get my SLAVE", etc to connect, instead of "can't get my companies/clients/etc" to connect. That's why darktrack 4.0/4.1 is better than any paid RAT on HF, for the simple fact that if they are doing illegal activities they are less likely to get their liscence revoked or worse. And also like I said previously, I wouldn't doubt if the whole darktrack instability thing was a rumor spread to make people keep buying the paid RATs. I've used 4.1 for a month on my networked PCs and still have all 5 or so of them, the only issues I had were the DNS wasn't resolving but that was an issue on my end, and sometimes when a client connected you have to reopen to see them. I do think the paid RATs are more stable, and I don't think they are bad products, I even have boughten before, but for people with illicit intentions free RAT without tracking is always the way to go.

Plus it doesn't use a user login server and doesn't track everything you do. I personally didnt ever bought one rat. From my personal experience, darktrack was highly unstable with me, but the main glitch was loosing clients or just randomly not connecting temporarily. Main options do work flawlessly, however some more sophisticated ones didnt, like the skype stuff. Ive tested it for a good time, like 3 weeks and for overall, it is a good rat for a free one, it is usable but not to place trust in it joeing777 - October 29, 2016, 5:20 am

Its not a rumor. I have personally tested from 3.0 version till this last one. VERY UNSTABLE. You keep losing systems on it. even on add to startup
