Soccer - November 1, 2016, 1:04 am

Finally....

If you noticed, i have been away from this forum for a LOONG time...i barely came on, met a few people and it changed my life. started meeting new people and expanding my network. later, it all paid off. added the pieces together and the puzzle was made.

money that i made was 40% online , and 60% IRL. i mixed them up both in order for my flex's to work completely...

might buy a new car, idek what to do with all of this, for now, its going in the bank...

dont believe me? fuck urself...i have pics and videos with me holding and counting it.. no one believes ppl these days... so just pm me....

not really time consuming, just reaaaally nerve racking. no hours a day

IRL i sold cars. go to auction, buy cheap cars, repair and clean them, sell it, get profit from that car, and buy another one.. keeps going for example.

the current car i drive, i picked up for $14,500. 2008 bmw 335xi 2dr with 69,000k on it (when i got it). if i hadnt of driven it and sold it. it would of been gone for 18k, QUICK 3500 profit... but i decided to keep it and drive it , now it has 94k km, so i can get it for for 15,500, still profit i guess

Nice, that's awesome, it takes skill to accomplish that. Not everyone is able to do that.

Have you considered selling cars on eBay Motors? You can arrange for local pickup or have the buyer pay for shipping. It's possible you can make a few extra thousand that way while saving some time showing the car to people IRL. ?

i just realized tht lol

Just bought a 2016 Range Rover sport autobiography and lemme tell ya... Over the years everyone I've known that has owned range rovers have been having problems except for the new models that launched in 2012-2013. Prior to the 2012-2013 Model Year Range rover's, there are just an incredible amount of technical problems that you're going to be dealing with. You live in Canada, and I can tell you that a 2016 Range Rover Sport diesel model can be netted for 75k before taxes in Vancouver. You can finance/lease that easily with the money you have at the moment and would be a way better buy than pouring your cash into a 2010 range rover sport. You'd be dumping money into a depreciating asset that took a huge hit on pre 2012-2013 models due to the old model being something that no one wants. So... if anything it is going to just keep going down and you'd be better off putting your money into a finance or getting an auto loan from your bank. Besides the aesthetics and overall value/reliability of the newer models, the new technology in the new range rovers is incredible and way worth putting the extra money into it.

Over the years everyone I've known that has owned range rovers have been having problems except for the new models that launched in 2012-2013. Prior to the 2012-2013 Model Year Range rover's, there are just an incredible amount of technical problems that you're going to be dealing with. You live in Canada, and I can tell you that a 2016 Range Rover Sport diesel model can be netted for 75k before taxes in Vancouver. You can finance/lease that easily with the money you have at the moment and would be a way better buy than pouring your cash into a 2010 range rover sport. You'd be dumping money into a depreciating asset that took a huge hit on pre 2012-2013 models due to the old model being something that no one wants. So... if anything it is going to just keep going down and you'd be better off putting your money into a finance or getting an auto loan from your bank. Besides the aesthetics and overall value/reliability of the newer models, the new technology in the new range rovers is incredible and way worth putting the extra money into it.

I did hear the technology in the newer models are fantastic. I never got the chance to drive a higher year model... Something i need to do

Why would you take the money out and not just leave it in your bank account

Did you do it just for bragging rights?
