Just sold them all for BTC on Yobit. Not even gonna touch a single penny from it, just gonna let it sit there.

PS: I can't reply to your PMs, not enough posts & rep yet.

In the event that this actually happened (I'm highly doubtful), that'd be a terrible thing to do. History has shown us exchanges are a terrible option for long term storage of any significant amount of money. In addition, if this Yobit account is in your real name, you just tied yourself directly to the crime.

Personally, I'd have tumbled it and stored it in a wallet only ever used through Tor (using Whonix).

Good luck, although I'm thinking this was just a troll.

Do you actually think I am trolling right now? Subscribe to the post, you just challenged me to show you proof right now.

EDIT: Just for you energ1zer - yogile.com/hf68is7u#41m

Look at those 4 pictures. Those are the GCR being sold in multiple parts as nobody would sell that much GCR in one amount. So while killing the market, I'm profiting off with approx $30K in BTC. The rest was sold on Bittrex for a quicker amount (Few thousands). Try to follow my tracks, you will end up lost in your own mess #trust

I don't troll nor do I condone in any matters of trolling. I'm good at what I do and I profit off of it.

EDIT 2: See this? yogile.com/hf68is7u#41l

Go see the value of 1,000,000 GCR Coins into BTC

Why not just a simple bitcoin account? I mean, if you have a good password and you're staying anonymous with the account then you should be good? No? Unless someone is directly looking for your account I guess.

Muggsy - November 7, 2016, 3:13 pm

I have seen crazier shit happen so I don't doubt this one bit.

Good shit OP.

Because the BTC is currently stored on a OTR Wallet but that OTR Wallet is also linked to my external wallet that is hosted on my private node. There is no way for anyone to even get near the wallet. On top of that, I only stored half of it. The other half as already been sold and is sitting in my rigged bank account.

Yeah this isn't much. 2 years I was scanning a Tor Webserver and realize that the web server was running an active marketplace. You don't even want to know how much BTC went missing ;)

Why spend money on a forum instead of taking that money and make more?

If I would find someone that is even more knowledgeable than me in BH I could get even more. On the server that had the coins, had another wallet but with 15,000,000 GCR Coins but the passphrase is linked to the OP password.

PS: 15 millions coins = $450,000.00 USD

It's actually based on luck. You can find anything. I won't go in details but it's pretty profitable ;)

PS: Linux, don't need to be jealous and neg rep me. If you would of made $35K, you'll be bragging too. On top of this, I'm in the right section to brag.

Not bad.

I remember a friend of mine found a wallet.dat backup on the internet, on a Bitcoin forum. It was made as a giveaway back when BTC was new, and there was 100 BTC on the wallet.

The forum never took off, but was hosted on a large server, so it stayed up even though nobody used it.

2 years ago my friend found it, by doing random google searches.

Some people is just lucky..

Goodness..... That's like $70,000 in todays value. Probably 1/2 the value back then.

Back then? It wasn't even worth a single penny. If it was a giveaway of 100 BTC, that must be in the launch time of Bitcoin where it wasn't nothing near valuable.

Yeah I understand, I mean that amount today would be 70k or probably 45k back when he found the wallet (2 years ago) as that user said.

1 BTC was around $1k at that time.
