Thread: Have a temp phone right now, should i enable 2FA?

Patzan - November 12, 2016, 2:21 pm

Hello guys, so i currently using my old iPhone 4S becuae my main LG G4 motherboard's got fcked lol.

I want to enable the 2FA thing but i don't know how should i backup so i won't have problems if this phone will get broken / when i will move back to my main phone.

TY

If you use Authy I think you can get a phone number change request, but you can only do it 2 times every 3 months

If you use authy and if you're gonna have the same number then yes you should.

EDIT:

With authy you can get all your accounts that are protected by authy. But you have to use the same number you had when registering with authy.

I'd say keep it and protect your phone all times

If you change phones and keep the same phone number, I think you'll be good:

If you lost your phone and expect to get a new one on the same number, simply wait till you get the phone and install the Authy App.

Use Authy, if you want to be extra cautious, just disable 2FA once you change phones and re-enable on your new one.

When you set up 2 step- print/write down/tattoo the code hackforums gives you; you can reset up authy or google auth again (if you need to) with the same code and login in again.

Just write down the secret and stash it somewhere safe and you won't need to deal with Authy.

You should be fine using Authy, as normal. However make sure you write down your secret.
