

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Any high functioning sociopaths?

Sweet16Mike - November 14, 2016, 12:41 pm

My name is Mike, that is no secret :D

I usually always get what I want and I use every damn trick in the book to achieve it.

Have no feelings at all, thanks to my ex girlfriend for that.

I can charm people like they are monkeys. I like being a sociopath but I guess that on long term it will get me killed.

Anyone else?

?

Gizmo - November 14, 2016, 12:43 pm

Nah, not me. But I like your avatar.

Sweet16Mike - November 14, 2016, 12:45 pm

(Nov 14, 2016 01:43 PM)Gizmo Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Nah, not me. But I like your avatar. thanks, snatched from one of the members here ?

Bluffer - November 14, 2016, 12:47 pm

So are you like Dexter or something?

Sweet16Mike - November 14, 2016, 12:50 pm

(Nov 14, 2016 01:47 PM)Bluffer Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) So are you like Dexter or something? hell no, that shit is too much for me, I just like to manipulate people to get what I want, sometimes I manipulate just for fun

Caliban - November 14, 2016, 12:52 pm

Hello yes i am high functioning autist

I am the men behind hillery clinnon and obamba, like i control them they are like puppets 4 me

Raf Simons - November 14, 2016, 12:52 pm

You're not a "high functioning sociopath" lol.

Sweet16Mike - November 14, 2016, 12:55 pm

(Nov 14, 2016 01:52 PM)Saint Laurent Paris Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) You're not a "high functioning sociopath" lol.

I don't consider myself a "high functioning sociopath", the title must have mislead you

Windows2016 - November 14, 2016, 1:05 pm in the past maybe sociopath is scary but not right now since alot of people know about that,

SIM-2228224 - November 14, 2016, 1:11 pm

I use my sociopathy for good, not evil.

Sweet16Mike - November 14, 2016, 1:15 pm

(Nov 14, 2016 02:11 PM)Adempus Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I use my sociopathy for good, not evil. the dark side is better, we have cookies

K l a u s - November 14, 2016, 1:28 pm

I always see who are the potential sociopaths. You probably don't notice due to your huge mental dysfunction, but it's people around you see you for what you are.

Sweet16Mike - November 14, 2016, 1:32 pm

(Nov 14, 2016 02:28 PM)Klaus m Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I always see who are the potential sociopaths. You probably don't notice due to your huge mental dysfunction, but it's people around you see you for what you are.

maybe you are right, maybe you are not, I judge people after I talk with them a little bit

Georgelopez - November 14, 2016, 1:32 pm

Narcissistic personality disorder fits the bill. It's much more likely than sociopathy based upon what I have read of you.

Most people who make claims like this are:

1. Lying. Pathological lying is on the psychopathic checklist, however, it's common in narcissists as well.
2. Claiming to be something that they perceive others to look at as "powerful" or "rare" or grandiose. You are trying to convince others of your own grandiose self image.

You're a textbook narcissist.

Defining characteristics of pathological lying include:

The stories told are usually dazzling or fantastical, but never breach the limits of plausibility, which is key to the pathological liar's tactic.

Your story is unverifiable and you know it.

The tales are not a manifestation of delusion or some broader type of psychosis; upon confrontation, the teller can admit them to be untrue, even if unwillingly.

The fabricative tendency is chronic; it is not provoked by the immediate situation or social pressure so much as it is an innate trait of the personality. There is some element of dyscontrol present.

A definitely internal, not an external, motive for the behavior can be discerned clinically: e.g., long-lasting extortion or habitual spousal battery might cause a person to lie repeatedly, without the lying being a pathological symptom.[2]

The stories told tend toward presenting the liar favorably. The liar "decorates their own person"[3] by telling stories that present them as the hero or the victim. For example, the person might be presented as being fantastically brave, as knowing or being related to many famous people, or as having great power, position, or wealth.

Pathological lying may also present as false memory syndrome, where the sufferer genuinely believes that fictitious (imagined) events have taken place. The sufferer may believe that he or she has accomplished superhuman feats or awe-inspiring acts of altruism and love — or has committed equally grandiose acts of diabolical evil, for which the sufferer must atone or already has atoned in her/his fantasies.

(Nov 14, 2016 01:41 PM)Sweet16Mike Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) My name is Mike, that is no secret :D I usually always get what I want and I use every damn trick in the book to achieve it. Have no feelings at all, thanks to my ex girlfriend for that. I can charm people like they are monkeys. I like being a sociopath but I guess that on long term it will get me killed.

Anyone else?

?Above the "monkeys" ie you and I. Narcissistic. A psychopath generally wouldn't call people monkey's or brag about being a psychopath because they are generally aware of the negative social consequences of being labeled as such. A psychopath's goal is to survive by deception. It's how they evolved. To take advantage of society by deceit. A narcissist has the goal of getting a dopamine hit by projecting a self image to others.

Notice the orange. Attoning for something he says he has done. "I'm this big bad psychopath, but in the end, it will get me killed".

Also, you wouldn't have "no feelings" due to an external event, ie your "ex girlfriend". Psychopathy is generally born, not bred.

Frukt - November 14, 2016, 1:35 pm

(Nov 14, 2016 01:50 PM)Sweet16Mike Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) hell no, that shit is to much for me, I just like to manipulate people to get what I want, sometimes I manipulate just for fun
Welcome to the club ?

Papa Cuda - November 14, 2016, 1:35 pm

Just go to any Subway restaurant

K l a u s - November 14, 2016, 1:38 pm

(Nov 14, 2016 02:32 PM)Georgelopez Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) shitton of bullshit
Probably just a edgy teenager who broke up with the love of his life. I would say max 16 years old.

rapidfire08 - November 14, 2016, 1:39 pm

I too confused psychoanalysis as a power tool to elevate my being until I was initiated into Yoga.

Georgelopez - November 14, 2016, 1:39 pm

(Nov 14, 2016 02:38 PM)Klaus m Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Probably just a edgy teenager who broke up with the love of his life. I would say max 16 years old.

Are you refuting my claim, or making a comment based off of my past trolling? ???

He could be a psychopath as pathological lying which I suspect here is on the checklist. I doubt it though. Probably just a narcissist.

K l a u s - November 14, 2016, 1:41 pm

(Nov 14, 2016 02:39 PM)Georgelopez Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Are you refuting my claim, or making a comment based off of my past trolling? ???

Just saying it's more likely that OP has been heartbroken and is putting on a cold act in order to show how hurt he got.

Mr.iOUS Mystic - November 14, 2016, 1:43 pm

Fucking using it to get laid, and to mind fuck pedos at ewhoring

Sweet16Mike - November 14, 2016, 1:44 pm

(Nov 14, 2016 02:32 PM)Georgelopez Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Narcissistic personality disorder fits the bill. It's much more likely than sociopathy based upon what I have read of you.

Most people who make claims like this are:

1. Lying. Pathological lying is on the psychopathic checklist, however, it's common in narcissists as well.

2. Claiming to be something that they perceive others to look at as "powerful" or "rare" or grandiose. You are trying to convince others of your own grandiose self image.

You're a textbook narcissist.

Defining characteristics of pathological lying include:

The stories told are usually dazzling or fantastical, but never breach the limits of plausibility, which is key to the pathological liar's tactic.

Your story is unverifiable and you know it.

The tales are not a manifestation of delusion or some broader type of psychosis; upon confrontation, the teller can admit them to be untrue, even if unwillingly.

The fabricative tendency is chronic; it is not provoked by the immediate situation or social pressure so much as it is an innate trait of the personality. There is some element of dyscontrol present.

A definitely internal, not an external, motive for the behavior can be discerned clinically: e.g., long-lasting extortion or habitual spousal battery might cause a person to lie repeatedly, without the lying being a pathological symptom.[2]

The stories told tend toward presenting the liar favorably. The liar "decorates their own person"[3] by telling stories that present them as the hero or the victim. For example, the person might be presented as being fantastically brave, as knowing or being related to many famous people, or as having great power, position, or wealth.

Pathological lying may also present as false memory syndrome, where the sufferer genuinely believes that fictitious (imagined) events have taken place. The sufferer may believe that he or she has accomplished superhuman feats or awe-inspiring acts of altruism and love — or has committed equally grandiose acts of diabolical evil, for which the sufferer must atone or already has atoned in her/his fantasies.

Notice the orange. Attoning for something he says he has done. "I'm this big bad psychopath, but in the end, it will get me killed".

Also, you wouldn't have "no feelings" due to an external event, ie your "ex girlfriend". Psychopathy is generally born, not bred.

umm, I disagree, the sentence at the end, "in the end it will get me killed" I put it there so that the story has a funny ending and if you read the article on wikipedia, paragraph "Causes" , it can be genetic, environmental, brain injury and some other theories a good day to you sir ?

(Nov 14, 2016 02:41 PM)Klaus m Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Just saying it's more likely that OP has been heartbroken and is putting on a cold act in order to show how hurt he got.
nope nope and nope, but I get you, it is hard to judge people from a thread
?

Georgelopez - November 14, 2016, 1:48 pm

(Nov 14, 2016 02:44 PM)Sweet16Mike Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) umm, I disagree, the sentence at the end, "in the end it will get me killed" I put it there so that the story has a funny ending and if you read the article on wikipedia, paragraph "Causes" , it can be genetic, enviromental, brain injury and some other theories

a good day to you sir ?

nope nope and nope, but I get you, it is hard to judge people from a thread
?
It's actually rather easy to judge.

From my other post:

Above the "monkeys" ie you and I. Narcissistic. A psychopath generally wouldn't call people monkey's or brag about being a psychopath because they are generally aware of the negative social consequences of being labeled as such. A psychopaths goal is to survive by deception. It's how they evolved. To take advantage of society by deceit. A narcissist has the goal of getting a dopamine hit by projecting a self image to others.

A psychopath generally won't do what you are doing now. They have the goal of taking advantage of others, and generally never reveal themselves to be psychopaths under any circumstances as it gets in the way of that goal.

Bismo - November 14, 2016, 1:49 pm

no i never take sociology in school

i bet it is fun tho!!!! :)