Thread: [\[Android\]Android Thermal Keylogger AKA PC Keylogger](#)

Dr.Octopus - December 1, 2016, 6:50 am

Got this idea , after reading an article on s(i)phone." The vibrations created by typing onto the computer keyboard can be detected by the accelerometer of the phone and translated by a program into readable sentences ".So started coding it since last night.What this tool does is when kept near to personal computer or a laptop(say 10-40cm) it key-logs every stroke that was entered/typed onto your computer/laptop.Would take few days though.It uses accelerometer as well as gyroscope sensors to capture and filter keystrokes.Going to release in two different versions.One for personal use , like key-logging your children and the other one is remote logger which sends keystrokes to server,when (application) installed on your employees phone and when he brings/keeps his phone near to his computer this tool would log everything and uploads the data to server ?

Your Valuable Suggestions are highly appreciated ?

Yes mate , if you want to keylog someone you can install it on your employees phone silently and it runs in background (using service) captures keystrokes and uploads it to the server ?

This is a gravedig. Let's avoid bringing up threads from 2016 that were bullshit.
