Thread: Does anyone make money reselling Supreme on Ebay/Craigslist?

W?lr?? - December 7, 2016, 7:36 pm

Hey, I'm wondering if there's anyone here that makes a lot of money getting Supreme drops and then reselling on Ebay or Craigslist.

- Is it worth it?

If you know where to get the clothes, tell if they are authentic and can master shipping + fees (if you use ebay) then yes with a good budget

I used to post affiliate links for sold out concerts on Craigslist.

Personally i think resellers business is something you build up over time in social medias and in your city/area. Most resellers here in NY are basically known throughout hype beasts and therefore always have a customer and they take care of inventory before it probably even hits their house. Also you need to know how to estimate how much a piece would go for and maybe even do a bit of researching. Anyways I'm not a reseller nor an expert or anything but based off of what I've seen this is how it is. IM actually thinking of paying for a bot and getting into the reselling business myself.

Does anyone know an alternative to Ebay and social media to sell? I don't want to build up social media and I don't want to deal with PayPal

Walrus Id try to sell cheap electronics on ebay buy them from Aliexpress or another wholesaler Id recommend having a good stock of them first at least 10 or 20 and remember if it is branded it sells better.

No that is really competitive right now and not an easy sell and almost every supplier on Aliexpress or Alibaba has someone who already sells on Ebay, so it's not really worth it. Hype brands seem like a great way to make money honestly, just a large amount of startup is needed.
