Saw KYC Vintage had some styles that I liked, but unfortunately heard their quality was not the greatest anyone know where I can purchase similar styles?

Try grailed.com, you can usually negotiate with the sellers.

I really like Walmart! Basic Tee's for like $7.50 a pop. Haha who cares what you look like on the street. Save your "Pimp/Swag" Money and buy a nice ride or house :)

You could check FrugalStreetwear's Reddit. <https://m.reddit.com/r/frugalstreetwear/>

There are quite a few sellers right here on HF selling items for great prices. Check the Secondary Sellers Market.

Eh. You can get a UNIQLO Supima Tee for around the same price when it's on sale and the quality is a lot better.

Don't use Plunder, they started fucking over their suppliers like a year back, and their products are mainly sus.

OP: If you think KYCVintage is cool, you still have a ways to go in your journey through fashion. Look through inspiration albums, runways, and anything else you can draw inspiration from until you find a style that jumps out at you. I would not invest all my money right now, as the way you dress will change greatly throughout months/years, so all I can recommend to you is surround yourself with all sorts of different styles and clothes until you finally settle at something you like.

Try Grailed.com, you can negotiate with the resellers for a better price.

I agree with this user haha. KYCVintage is for the most part regarded as a part of Mallcore now. I recommend inspo albums on /r/streetwear. The subreddit is okay for the most part but try to find something different. That subreddit is turning into green bomber, stan smith, etc. and it's starting to look uniform and boring. You'll find a few that you'll love and you'll learn to love the winter time. Layer season is always the best season lmao
