Thread: [Expensive Flight Ticket - Flying Business Class \[Balling\] - \$7700](#)

Al-Bundy - December 16, 2016, 2:03 pm

Like most people, I love going on vacations and flying. However, this is the first time I'm flying in December when the prices for the ticket are sky high.

However, doesn't mean shit to me. Am I bragging? Absolutely. Am I a cocky bitch for it? Maybe. But I have earned everything I spend, so doesn't phase me much.

Spoiler (Click to View)

Who wouldn't when they can afford a $7700 plane ticket like it's nothing.

For those who say it's fake, just look at the spoiler below.

Being humble is definitely important but if you've achieved something you shouldn't be scared to congratulate yourself on it and embrace the wins. It's important to do so or else you'll limit yourself from achieving even more. Mark Zuckerberg is a really humble guy but every now and then you see him posting or should I say 'flexing' about the amount of people he has brought together on FB and his other apps. Does that mean he's 'flexing' and not being humble? Nope!

It means he's telling himself that he has come quite far but still is very far from the finish line!

Firstly, love the name. I wish I could have taken it. Secondly, it sure is. It's mainly business and some days for vacation. But still going to be enjoying the plane ride sleeping on a bed rather than next to two people who take up all your space.

Try stocks. You might find some luck there.

I don't know what impressed me more..

The fact that you spent $7K on a flight ticket without being bothered by it or that you pissed of so many people with this ridiculous purchasement.

I mean, yes it's your money, yes it's nice to fly 1x for $7k.. but I think about how many people I could save (help out financially, support or suprise with gifts) for $7k.

Anyway, it's still a great amount so congratulations with that :)

Think about the families of the employees/employers OP has supported now that he paid $7k for the flight tickets. From the manager of that airline to the baggage handlers. Doesn't that count as helping/supporting someone financially?

You might think of it as a capitalist's point of view but it's nothing but the truth.

$7K for 1 flight ticket isn't the same as paying every employee (employers) the same amount divided equally.

There are a lot of "costs" and "taxes" which are bullshit.

Also paying $7K to "fly luxurious" is just like riding a bus for $500.

You spent a lot of money, you feel "fancy" and relaxed, but it won't make your destiny any prettier.

I don't see it from any point, just NEVER going to pay $7K for 1 freaking flight ticket. Plenty of money to increase the quality of my vacation instead of flying luxurious which only takes a few hours. ?

Again, this is just my opinion.

Not here to discuss my point of view with anybody :)

I didn't say that every employee would be paid $7k each. They'd get supported in a way because if OP and other travelers out there don't pay that kind of money for their flights then the employees wouldn't get a raise or even worse a paycheck (Bye bye, you're fired) and their families would be in trouble. Point is, that money goes somewhere and it benefits people in a good way whether you want to believe it or not.

I didn't say that 7K each, I said dividing the $7K among the staff equally isn't the same as paying $7K for 1 flight ticket.

Because there are a lot of fees, taxes, costs and "profit" for the Government as well as the "boss" who owns that airport.

Ofcourse, it's nice to give the employees a nice amount of money (in the form of salary thanks to buying a $7K ticket) yet they won't make as much as if you'd just split $7K between 100 people $700 each.

I never said I "believe it or not." I only said that I would NEVER pay $7K for 1 flight ticket (1 way of transportation) if I could make MORE people happy with my money than just a few employees who aren't even earning the amount they deserve ?

But okay, you're the "Ebook Giant" + member since August 2016, so I am 100% sure you know it way better than I do.

It's not a selfish act and you have made it quite obvious that you just don't know how any of this works. You're spitting random words for no reason and it's clear that you're too narrow-minded to understand the point of my responses to you and therefore I am not going to waste more time discussing this with you.

True $7k isn't going to be paid to every employee, but if a lot of people fly like me, they will make huge profits. Means more bonuses to employees since business is good.

Plus, the destination won't be prettier. But my journey will be pretty fucking amazing for 27 hours flight in total.

I never said you can't do both, just telling you (as my opinion) that I would never spend $7K at 1 flight, no matter how luxurious it is.

To keep up with your metaphor, it's like:

Hey I just bought a new house, going to drive to my new house with a luxurious limousine which I paid $7K for.

It's nice that you can go to a holiday, buy a house, rent a boat, whatever.
I just tried to share my opinion, which is that I would never spent such money at any way of travelling from A to B.

That's absolutely fine. However, if you had to sit cramped up in a car in the back with 2 other passengers for 24 hours straight (give or take), or had the option to have a limousine with a bed, what would you honestly choose?

Plus, it's more expensive right now because of Christmas. Usually it's not this expensive It's around $3000-$4000 at max.

Stop this bullshit please, omfg...
What if you had 10 million bucks in a limousine but you can't touch it unless you never touch a plane again.
Unless 1000 innocent kids have to die? Would you still refuse it?

Nah, don't be like that.
Your fantasy is going wild over my opinion regarding this $7K flight ticket just so you can force me to change my opinion / perception of something so small with made up stories / scenes while OP isn't in such situation.

As I said before, I only expressed how I feel.
I told several times that I WOULD NEVER pay for such expensive form of transportation, no matter if I could afford it or not.
That it would be better (for me) to spread $7K among people who really NEED it instead of me flying myself to another country as luxurious as it can be.

Don't twist my words, don't ask me "what if" questions, don't come up with stupid ideas.
The facts are: OP paid $7K to fly from A to B, which I would NEVER do.

I said what I had to say, which was MY OPINION, further I am not interested in "what if" or "what would you honestly choose" bullshit.

Thank you for finally understanding that not one "what if" question can change my perception regarding this expensive luxurious purchasement simply for transportation. ?
