Merry Christmas to you and good luck everyone :)

Well for a tradition we get together with all of the family, even though several people can't stand each other.

Alcohol mostly does the job and although the beginning is really akward, it's the happiest time I ever see these people spending together.

?Shady - December 19, 2016, 12:17 pm

My favorite holiday tradition is setting up the tree & decorating it. Especially eating half of the candy canes while trying to put them up on the tree. The best part is lighting the tree, all those lights just shining bright, it's amazing.

Thanks for this contest OP & best of luck to everyone who's entering. Happy holidays to everyone, hope you're enjoying it.

Thank you for hosting this festive giveaway, I love waiting up and eating really early so I can starve all day before eating a big Christmas dinner.

BTB™ - December 19, 2016, 6:23 pm

Our favourite holiday tradition:

We used to go to a religious place. Serve food and donate basic living items like clothes etc to the poor. It was in much larger capacity in the past; like serving around 100 needy souls.

Now, the capacity has reduced due to our own current financial status. But we make sure that our tradition must go on in whatever capacity that is possible and as a family start saving for this noble cause separately.

My parents say and believe that we get unlimited blessings and good wishes by doing this.

Always serve the poor and help them. God Bless all.

TYLER - December 19, 2016, 8:33 pm

My parents are also a lot more tolerant with me drinking more alcohol with them around so should be even funner this year.

josimc - December 20, 2016, 8:42 pm

My favorite tradition is a game we call the slay game. Pretty much there is a table with a small slay on it with a bunch of small wrapped presents. The game itself is a Q&A with a buzzer to see who rings in first. Obviously the person who presses the button first gets to answer the question, and if they are correct then they get that present associated with the question #. If they got it wrong, they wouldn't get a penalty except for looking dumb..
