(May 16, 2015 11:11 PM)Exodus. Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I bought this RAT a while back and I have been getting use to the UI since it has a pack ton features. My favorites would probably be the File Guardian, Anti-Malware list, and the Client Manager options. The stability and persistence is incomparable to other RAT's. The remote desktop feature was really stable overall a few things could have used some improvements. The station configuration has a really nice specific keyword tag system to find what you're looking for in terms of key-logs or file searches. Luminosity-Link really does outperform other RAT's that I have used from HF, the whole UI, performance, and the packed features really show their outstanding comparison to other RAT's. In overall, Luminosity-Link is the last RAT I will be purchasing on HF for a long, long, time. Some of the questions you ask are unnecessary. It shows that you guys have not been exploring the many wonderful features in LuminosityLink. Take your time and see the features under miscellaneous and you won't ask certain questions. There are more features you have to explore, please do that.

Luminosity is something you have to take your time to unravel like a cute damsel. You don't rush it, take it slowly, one step at a time. And you will be amazed! If you have used other RATs before using LuminosityLink then you will understand what I am saying and also appreciate the efforts that was put into LuminosityLink.

Please guys, have a positive attitude and outlook. I am sure you will enjoy LuminosityLink. And you would be grateful you had the opportunity to use it.

Im not using it to its fully potential, but the futures i've used have been amazing.

System function has a lot of things you can do to mess with whoever you have installed the rat on.

The speed of connecting and reconnecting is insane.

The first time i bought it i had doubts that it would be hard to setup since it was a few dollars more than the other rats.

But it was the easiest rat to setup i've tried. I had no problems with it, and it took me about 5 min to explore a bit and build my first binary.

Im still exploring the futures but i like it a lot now even with using just a few things!

Don't hesitate to deal with this guy! fast reply and good support, and a well made product. (Jun 4, 2015 04:03 PM)ThePhobia Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Awesome RAT, incredibly stable. Could someone please let me and other users know.... What is the best Crypter to use with LL.

KFC Watermelon - December 27, 2016, 8:36 pm

Would anybody use this?

You run this on a PC you wish to monitor, input your details, and it does the rest. It even automatically updates the client binary for you, and you wouldn't have to worry about security solutions.

I think it would be useful, but as usual, I'm in conflict with myself. LuminosityLink is meant to be used for legitimate purposes, but it annoys me that it's detected by antiviruses. Then again, it's also a good thing because it provides some layer of protection against people who abuse your software. However, it would also stop anyone from using your software for remote support or something, which I think LL would excel in, as it has all the features that a remote support tech would ever need.

But to answer your question, yes, I would use it.

If I released the above program, it would simply be an addition. It wouldn't replace or modify the existing client binary builder in anyway.

I'm working on improving user experience, such as adding built-in support features, creating tutorials, and adding a support tab.

Also, the next update will change how LuminosityLink's client binary handles multiple accounts being logged in at once.

Any requests regarding the support tab?

also do you mean like self-upgrading? when a new LL version comes out, we don't have to update the binary to new ver and so?

I only have the interface of the actual application itself designed, and an outline of features. I haven't started coding it.

That being said....

You'd simply run the application on a PC you wish to monitor, input your DNS/IP/Serial key, and hit Connect. Then it connects to your LuminosityLink application.

I could make it self-update the client binary (since it could re-download it as a separate application).

It would basically be an advanced client binary with an interface that allowed easy management. If you needed to help a friend with their PC, they could simply download the application and connect to your LuminosityLink.

KFC Watermelon - December 29, 2016, 8:20 am

Next update is in works, here is what I have so far:

- Improved support system designed to enhance user experience
- Improved Anti-Malware: Both Blocking applications, and removing malware will be improved. The Proactive Anti-Malware is receiving some minor adjustments.
- Modified how the client binary handles multiple user accounts. Now the client binary will run under each user account instead of one. So if a computer is logged into two users, two clients will appear in LuminosityLink.
- Startup is being overhauled to improve stability

I just want to vouch for KFC. His software is superb and hes never ceased to impress me. He's always quick and helpful to help whenever needed. To be honest, I have yet to find anything that surpasses Luminosity features. Just when you think Luminosity cant get any better, it does and keeps reaching for the stars. Best part is you have this forever once you get it.

Luminosity will be two years old April 2017.

I am working on the QuickConnect application. The existing client binary builder will not be modified or removed.

When you use the uninstall command, the client tries to move the application (.exe) to TEMP (to get rid of the file.) If it fails to move the file, it writes an ACL to deny access to the file, so the client binary cannot be executed. However, the ACL also prevents the file from being deleted...

It's a complex process.

Before, the client binary could only have one instance per PC. After the update, it will be one instance per user account. The above picture shows two clients on the same machine, check the "Machine Name".

In addition to the above changes, the installation and startup have received many adjustments and improvements.

KFC Watermelon - January 16, 2017, 2:47 pm

LuminosityLink 1.5.6 has been released! This update overhauls many aspects of LuminosityLink, and includes a new way to connect clients using the new QuickConnect application.

LuminosityLink QuickConnect allows you to easily connect computers you wish to manage. There is a new tab in LuminosityLink that allows you to generate a configuration code containing your connection details. Simply paste this code in QuickConnect and you will be able to connect and manage your computers with ease. Check the new QuickConnect tab under Settings --> QuickConnect.

In addition to LuminosityLink QuickConnect, there are many additional changes to 1.5.6:

- The main LuminosityLink application has been renamed to 'LuminosityLink Workstation'.
- Startup, Installation, and Uninstallation has been completely overhauled. It is now much more stable and effective.
- The client binary may now be installed for all users. This means you can have multiple clients on the same computer. With 'Install for all users' checked in the Client Builder, you will have a client for each user that is logged onto the PC. Please note this requires administrator rights.
- A new Support tab under Settings --> Support allows you to easily view the latest tutorials, and contact support for assistance.
- There is now an option to Enable and Disable Windows Defender on Windows 8 and 10 under System Functions. To access this feature, right click a client, and go to Miscellaneous --> System Functions.
- Both the Proactive Anti-Malware (heuristic scanner) and manual Anti-Malware has been upgraded. New methods are used to remove detected and blacklisted items.

Overall, countless amount of improvements have been made behind the scenes in order to improve stability and functionality.

tcsh - January 17, 2017, 10:27 pm

Nice update KFC, as always.

Might I suggest making the clients in the list that share the same PC, be more noticeable?

For example If you have 10 clients online, while 3 in the list are on the same PC it would at some point and under certain conditions become tiresome to see which is which by just the PC name.

I'd suggest coloring the client list and make same PC clients in a block, or just color the machine name column and assign same color for same pc clients. I'm sure with a bit of tinkering around you could find a solution that looks professional and does the job intended :)

I only mention this because of running into this problem constantly in my own work with lists that display clients or db row information for that matter, at some point there is clutter if you don't differentiate properly, visually.

Or you could add skins, that change the Ui entirely if need be.

Sorry if these are already implemented, I haven't used LL in a couple of months and can't seem to remember if you have these added :)

It happens because the bandwith is very weak or the PC has slow specs which will take longer to get all the information out of it.

Based on a quick google search, [censored] does not support port forwarding:

[https://support.\[censored\].com/hc/en-us/articles/208084025-Do-you-offer-port-forwarding-](https://support.[censored].com/hc/en-us/articles/208084025-Do-you-offer-port-forwarding-)

Without port forwarding, it is easy to assume [censored] would not work with LuminosityLink.

I'm assuming you're using Proxifier. In which case, you'll have to create a rule within Proxifier so Luminosity.exe is not using the proxy within Proxifier.

I assume that by "how" you mean "how do I use it?". Basically, you configure it to mine your specified cryptocurrency and it mines silently. Silently, as in no window is shown when the miner is active. You can configure it to use a certain amount of CPU resources as well (100%, 99% or 50%).

I've never been in a situation where I've held a large number of computers, but I would imagine that it all depends on your internet connection and system resources.

Im not support either but the proxifer needs to be installed on the machine of where LL is located. So in this case you'll have to use the VPS to use the socks5 feature on your clients.

This is actually doable on a Windows VPS, seeing as Windows VPS typically have all ports unblocked and open. Just ensure you disable windows firewall.

Example of how to do this:

Say your SOCKS 5 server is "127.0.0.1:133725"

Go on your other PC and connect to "VPSIP:133725"

It should work, I've tested it before without issue.

It's set that way because it's the most effective way to possibly do it.

The way LuminosityLink downloads files involves initializing a new connection, sending the data, and closing said connection.

Sending thousands of files at once would possibly overload the software (or clients internet, whichever comes first.)

Creating a ZIP of a folder before downloading it is by far the most effective way to transfer data. It's the quickest, allows you to resume/pause the transfer, and is by far the most organized.

It is true that if you compress a larger sized folder, "Processing" window will appear:

In the next update, I will look into hiding this window. Shouldn't be a problem. LuminosityLink already has the ability to open any specified URL in Chrome or Firefox completely hidden by hiding the window.

I fully agree with you, download a single file is effectively

I liked your idea "hidden creating a ZIP "

but the question arises:

hidden creating a ZIP, further download (resume/pause) and then how to remove hidden from the client this big archive ?

2. clear the list (without deleting the files)

If you delete a file/folder within client manager, it does not show a dialog, because the client binary itself deletes the file/folder.

When you ZIP a folder in LuminosityLink, it uses the ZIP feature built into Windows. Adding a feature to the client binary to ZIP folders itself would add a lot to the file size, which is why I opted for using the built-in ZIP feature in Windows.

As for your download list suggestion, I can easily do that.

Do you still remove everyone "connections"?

I would like to buy LL if you could make a version independent of the connection to your servers, in a way that you would have no control over our "connections".

KFC Watermelon - March 7, 2017, 9:19 am

Remember that you can find the latest tutorials on the official website:

Any suggestions on tutorials to add or improve upon?

Real-time support 24/7 is not feasible. You contacted support during the weekend, so a response may take 24-48 hours.

Queries are replied to within 2-24 hours on weekdays.

I have no interest in selling an independent version of LuminosityLink that does not have a licensing system, because it would simply be disturbed without my permission. Also, it would take an extensive re-code consisting of thousands of lines to code. The license system is utilized for a lot of functions, especially client builder.

It's not happening.

You may now rearrange the order of columns on the Machine List. LuminosityLink will automatically save the order and column width. You can manage these settings under Settings --> General, within the "Application Settings" groupbox.

In addition, you may now double click a client within Machine List to open Client Manager.

I hope everybody enjoys this small but worthwhile update. It should improve user experience for everyone.

KFC Watermelon - March 9, 2017, 6:48 pm

Hi all,

I hope everyone is enjoying today's update.

The licensing system has been changed in order to better improve user experience:

Before: If you needed to switch LuminosityLink to a new PC, you'd need to email for a Hardware ID reset.

Now: All you have to do is close LuminosityLink, wait a maximum of five minutes (to end your session), and then login on your other machine.

This completely gets rid of the need for Hardware ID resets all together.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but doesn't it mean that all someone has to do to get access to LuminosityLink for free is to steal your credentials? I guess you could argue that if they had access to all your credentials, they could have sent an email as you asking for a reset with the old system so there is no difference.

If somebody steals your credentials, you'll know really quickly, because as soon as they login to LuminosityLink, you will be kicked off. You will instantly know.

From there, all you have to do is request a password reset to have your password changed. As long as you have access to your email, you can request a password reset.

Why would you need a crypter to test it on your laptop?

You're literally breaking the binary for no reason, make exceptions and enjoy improved stability.

If you're just trying to sound legit, c'mon man you can do better.

If you're trying to offer remote support, then no one will download a file that has multiple antivirus detections. That's one legitimate reason to use a crypter.

Does LL have an image thumb viewer in Client Manager? I can't seem to find it, if indeed it does, and the only way to see images is by downloading them. Sorry for asking here, it's been a while since I've used my LL license and maybe I've missed a few things..

I've given support through unencrypted IM stubs before, if you're a support agent you should already have your clients trust.

My favorites would probably be the File Guardian, Anti-Malware list, and the Client Manager options. The stability and persistence is incomparable to other RAT's. The remote desktop feature was really stable overall a few things could have used some improvements. The station configuration has a really nice specific keyword tag system to find what you're looking for in terms of key-logs or file searches. Luminosity-Link really does outperform other RAT's that I have used from HF, the whole UI, performance, and the packed features really show their outstanding comparison to other RAT's. In overall, Luminosity-Link is the last RAT I will be purchasing on HF for a long, long, time. Some of the questions you ask are unnecessary. It shows that you guys have not been exploring the many wonderful features in LuminosityLink. Take your time and see the features under miscellaneous and you won't ask certain questions. There are more features you have to explore, please do that.

Luminosity is something you have to take your time to unravel like a cute damsel. You don't rush it, take it slowly, one step at a time. And you will be amazed! If you have used other RATs before using LuminosityLink then you will understand what I am saying and also appreciate the efforts that was put into LuminosityLink.

Please guys, have a positive attitude and outlook. I am sure you will enjoy LuminosityLink. And you would be grateful you had the opportunity to use it.

I'm not using it to its full potential, but the features I've used have been amazing. System function has a lot of things you can do to mess with whoever you have installed the rat on. The speed of connecting and reconnecting is insane. The first time I bought it I had doubts that it would be hard to setup since it was a few dollars more than the other rats.

But it was the easiest rat to setup I've tried. I had no problems with it, and it took me about 5 min to explore a bit and build my first binary.

I'm still exploring the features but I like it a lot now even with using just a few things! Don't hesitate to deal with this guy! fast reply and good support, and a well made product. I actually choose not to use instant messaging services for many reasons:

They are insecure (Mainly applies to Skype.) I've had Skype accounts hijacked in the past. I don't trust it.

It's incredibly time consuming. Imagine if I used Skype and added all users. It would be a disaster, based on previous experiences.

The support system already in place works very well

I highly recommend staying away from Skype if you value your privacy whatsoever.

The station configuration has a really nice specific keyword tag system to find what you're looking for in terms of key-logs or file searches. Luminosity-Link really does outperform other RAT's that I have used from HF, the whole UI, performance, and the packed features really show their outstanding comparison to other RAT's. Assuming their power supply unit failed and shorted the server, then yeah, the most they can say is "sorry". No idea what I'd do in that situation either. Life is stressful, shit happens, things go wrong. The server failed. They'll replace the parts and get it back up.

Teamviewer can do it for you. as you do not need a rat set up only to help people where's your brain buddy..Yeah no cannot use reverse proxy when im over there. So teamviewer is a no go. Also TV does have it's limitation. Your just being rude thinking a rat isn't for me when clearly you do not know how i am using it.

kfc, you make the output file size smaller to 60-100kb, the current file size is really big.
latest update ain't worth it pls huongviet - April 7, 2017, 12:13 pm

Honestly, I am frankly amazed at this latest update. It is 100% complete bullshit to be honest. Would KFC frankly and honestly say when he began this project years ago, and had this TOS (keeping my logs but not sharing it...which is absolute crap by the way) and having the unattended mode active on, he would have had sales? My guess is Naaaaaaah!!!!

This has nothing to do with illegally using this RAT, i use it legit, but anyone who cannot read between the line is just plain dumb.

R.I.P to a very good RAT, we had great times together, but this RAT will go down in no time. Just my opinion...anyone with a problem with it can go suck the nearest man balls

I think he is just trying to cover his ass considering what happened weeks ago to the coder of Nanocore

But I believe he had already gotten a system that detects binary of his customers who abuse the system and can kick them out in a second, obviously that wasn't enough and he had to push an RIP update.

Good luck to him and sales.....if there come, but I am already out the door, and won't be using this anymore at least till this update is undone....even at that, the harm has already being done

Am i then only one which has extremely bad stability issues with LL ? Remote Desktop never open when i click on it.. when i click 10 times on "Remote Desktop" it maybe show up for 1 time extremely laggy.. other festures doesnt work until i hit them 10 times. Seems extremely laggy but PING is good. Other softwsre like IM or # doesnt have such problems.

In my point of view the update is cool but LL doesnt work properly for me now so i had to change software.

Goold luck for the future

why is this still being sold here ? with this recent update it might aswell be like teamviewer, i understand you trying to cover ur ass but atleast change the sales page and warn potential buyers of this update just the tos isnt enough and is extremely deceptive because new buyers that have no clue of whats been going on with this shitty update will buy it without hesitation then get fucked.

tcsH - April 18, 2017, 10:39 pm

I don't mean to bash or anything but the country and language update is a terrible idea. It's 2017 and the world is so interconnected that you can't really attempt to restrict things in this way. This sort of approach is reminiscent of the '90's

Like it or not, things are global now and people like and want that, it's similar to restricting content on the web based by country and similar, medieval solutions.

Sorry to say but I've requested an account deletion since I plan to add remote clients in the future and I couldn't manage them with LL the way things are going and constantly changing.

I do wish you well with the product and I've enjoyed it, overall. Thanks!

ps for the would be trolls: No, I'm not using it maliciously - logs will confirm.

For anyone who wants to bitch about the changes you just need to stop. I have been using this for my legitimate managed services clients as this product was much cheaper that other mainstream options like Teamviewer or Logmein. This still works 100% without issue. I am actually happy he wants to start marketing it more a legal administration tool.

If you are looking for a RAT for any purposes that are not legal just fine something else.

For a little extra info:

I currently have 50 clients running LuminosityLink across the US (where I am located). I have yet to lose my clients and all features have been working great with all of them.

I back this project and his VPN 110%. It's high quality and beats the hell out of again a lot of the mainstream software out there.

LuminosityLink is only to be used on computers you have permission to use it on. That's why the executable is region locked, you cannot install it on computers outside your country.

How future customers could know that ? This attitude is ridiculous.

That's all the business ? -make money with some dumb kiddies on hack forums-turn the software to the legal sector and target a more professional tree of customers-

If just one of you is able to give me 2-3 names of HQ & complete RATs like this one, containing BRUTAL options to persist and hide on computers with options like injection in registry/services/browser/task scheduler, something clean, with options, like you could only dream about, I give him 4 cookies ?

You can add those "rootkit" features to ANY RAT using advanced crypters or asking skilled developers for custom crypts.

Yes I know but my crypting method, that I love and fud me for a long time don't allow me to do that, and anyway, I love to have these features natively integrated to the software, it looks more stable to me.

But yeah, for sure, your solution looks legit. The problem is to choose the correct RAT now, something stable and maintained by developers.

Any idea ? Since DarkComet, I can't choose at all. I tried Orcus, but, I don't know, something disturbs me.

Get out of here with your fear mongering.

Fact is if you use a RAT illegally, expect legal consequences.

Dont expect to rob a bank and just dip out with the cash, they got security cameras, and cops are pretty good at identification of suspects. (example)

He could possibly be facing legal bullshit with this business. After all these updates to prevent malicious use, people can still sue him and fuck him over even if he has legal bases... Anything can happen, really.

I wouldn't doubt that authorities might have been trying to take down the RAT market, one by one.

Any RAT coder can face the same prob as NanoCore, as all the HF RATs was cracked, and leaked

Authorities will not spend time on reading logs from RAT servers, to know who use it maliciously, and who's not .

Last time, when KFC Watermalon was SICK, he tell and send us a messages from his laptop that he's in a hospital, and he tell us to forgive him because he did a surgery .
But absence without explanation => Something is not going right .

Because it's impossible that a coder who sell product can log from 'pc,smartphone', and take less than 1 Min to explain his absence to the customers .

Bye .

Sad. It seems as if most RAT authors get arrested while on vacation. Could be because it makes it easier to extradite people when they enter foregin jurisdiction. It doesn't necessary has to be on the news. Sometimes you are offered a chance to co-operate with law enforcement, and if chose to do that, then there is a chance they will keep a very low profile regarding the arrest.

Not implying that's what happened in this case, but it's not impossible.

Blackshads author is that swede who got arrested while on vacation.

I was just thinking logically and statistically on this one, considering the US is more likely than any other country to indict RAT authors, then they could wait for you to go on vacation.

If you need more classical examples, then you could google "smiling hacker".

It's not really a RAT, but that's no big difference in the eyes of law enforcement, they see no big difference once either hit the spotlight as they both carry similar legal consequences.

you said most RAT authors were taken while on vacation, that's why i questioned it.

I already know about many others kidnapped when on vacation but had nothing to do with coding RATs so it's irrellivent no offence was just curious if there was more

Not that i'm not a big fan of carpers/nitpickers.

I said "it seems", actually referring to my own opinions and views, as extensive research has to be made to reach a more accurate conclusion, so I'm sorry if that wasn't made clear.

Anyway, it still could be possible that most RAT authors get arrested while on vacation.

Just a safety precaution as things could go south really quickly.

Friend had Black Shades installed back in the day. Didn't do much with it, never got his computer ceased.

But ya, if you pulled a stupid you might as well make finding the last pieces of evidence extremely difficult.

I got my computer ceased and searched but I only had 2 of my own computers on it.

KFC's past few weeks are quite unexplainable so I'm just warning everyone that if they had even one client on their rat without their consent then they should take the appropriate actions.

If by 'fair' you mean that you own the machines or have consent to operate them then you should be good and have no reason to be afraid. It's just for the people that don't.
