Thread: My Opinion On Love And Why It's Mostly Misunderstood

so i don't know where to speak up so i will just do it here i guess, so yea im that kind of guy who would appreciate any good done to him i literally remember every single compliment ive received this year from anyone with much appreciation and i think its my anxiety because anxiety isn't always a bad thing i know how to read people and know what they want and what they hide and ive never been wrong my entire life which leads me to the point is im the opposite of what most guys act like or treat girls im the type that appreciates support and personality and that's what many girls search for? (i have no idea) but im guessing girls don't like to be treated as a meat or like based on their looks or shape..etc i know most guys won't even try to talk to girl who's a bit different (only hot girls) or something but that's not how i look at things i usually look at the heart don't judge her by her looks maybe you actually talked to her and really liked her personality and turns out she's the one instead of hanging out with "hoes" who talk with you for your money or look or just to impress their friends that she's in a relationship that's not going to work love is not like that people don't realise that until they grow up and its too late, I'll give a example to clear out what love is really about so lets say a gamer guy loved a model so much and she loved him back too you'd think that's the best right? but the model is probably intrested in fashion and makeup and other male models while the gamer has totally opposite intrests in games ..etc in this situation even though they love each other doesn't mean its the best for them what if the gamer guy dated another gamer girl? they would play all day and talk about so much stuff and have a much more stable relationship and same goes for the model if she dated a male model they are both intrested in the same stuff so if a girl is hot and likes you that doesn't always mean the best you have to search for what completes you and not what would be "cool" and that's just an example its not just what they are intrested in.. love is based on so many things that only you know what you want, for example im really shy if i dated a really outgoing girl it wouldn't work out.. so yeah.. thanks for reading looking forward to hear your opinions.

I believe the internet is the worst place to ask for girl advice, not to be sexist but like you said you can read girls really well and you are right there are hella different types of girls. The percentage of girls i've met online that are very clingy/anti-social/cringy is super high. Honestly your anxiety might be your downfall if you want a really good girl that is outgoing and has things going for her you're gonna have to be self reliant. The outgoing ones love a mf who has his shit straight.

Relationships should be based on tolerance, respect, loyalty and common interests.

I'm sure most don't understand love until they're older. Good post OP, interesting.

Wow that was a huge run-on sentence lol. But I see what you mean. I personally think that the definition of love is simple.

My definition of love:

Waking up every day and wondering what you can do to make them happy/smile or just make their day better. It doesn't have to be materialistic things. Just anything to make them happy and making them your number one priority.
