Thread: Buy Monero \(XMR\) Now!

Kill Joy - December 27, 2016, 2:16 pm

Price when thread started: $12.85

Current price: <https://coinmarketcap.com/currencies/monero/>

Monero has surged $3+ today. Thankfully I've been stockpiling at $8. Monero is on the verge of becoming the next big Crypto Currency. Discuss.

Quote:Beijing, China (PRUnderground) December 23rd, 2016

Could it be the next Bitcoin? Cryptocurrency watchdogs say, very well could be. Set to launch mid-January, Monero (XMR) is not slated as an alternative to the widely-recognized Bitcoin. It's a more powerful cryptocurrency and insiders say its release could increase 24-hour volumes by approximately $300 million USD. To that end, the derivative to Chinese currency (CNY) is garnering great interest as underground banks and investors in China await the release of RingCT – lauded as the most confidential and anonymous cryptography in the marketplace. Positioning themselves for the influx of transfers, Monero's core team developers increased production and have announced the release of their beta GUI wallet.

Dodging tracing, surveillance, and monitoring, while being invisible on the blockchain, Monero will allow underground banks and investors to feel safer doing cryptocurrency transactions. Allowing people to take control of their money, consumer domination is forcing Okcoin and BTCC to integrate to XMR. Friendly-GUI wallets without fees for consumers, banks, and investors, the cryptocurrency is used to transfer funds into CNY outside the country to avoid deflation. Thus, the focus of Monero is to keep it valuable, less volatile, and extremely private.

A representative said, "China's population will skyrocket the price of Monero. This could cause the next round of cryptonaires. With Bitcoin, some bought at $1 or $15 and the price is now around $800. It could be another baby boomer for cryptocurrency millionaires and remember the worth can be converted to USD easily."

About Monero (XMR)

Monero (XMR) is the only cryptocurrency that has the most complex state of the art cryptography. With its unique code that is totally different than Bitcoin, it is widely-recognized for its privacy and anonymity for use as digital currency. Riccardo Spagni is the Lead Core Developer for the open source project, Monero.

There's currently no major website that sells XMR. I use Shapeshift.io to exchange other coins into XMR.

I actually believed it was a ponzi coin when it dropped to $4 USD, now I regret I just dumped 200 XMR into ETH.

It's really not too late, unless you lost that investment on ETH.

Why not? The Chinese are picking it up more and more and will continue to do so come January. It's way more anonymous than any other coin and come January (hopefully) it'll basically be completely anonymous by hiding the amount of money sent in each transaction.

Just wait till RingCT is released. It'll shoot up then.

I use changelly.com for btc to xmr and vice versa. I thought about investing a lot when it was only 4$, decided to put 150$ when it was 8 :)

I believe the next year is going to be huge for monero. I'll wait for it to stabilize on 13 and put in extra 300$.

Btw, if you plan to do this on a bigger scale, I would suggest spreading the investment to more currencies, but keep at least 50% in monero. I feel like this is a great opportunity for investment - it's basically btc with built in tumbling, it must grow. +many deep web markets started accepting it Nice, with the new GUI it's so much easier. I installed the wallet, did a small amount to see how it works. I used shapeshift as suggested by OP.

May I know what's the difference between address & integrated address? I assume payment ID is a unique identifier?

EDIT : Is it a good practice like BTC to generate a new address after every transaction?

Shapeshift is wonderful.

I believe the integrated address is an imported one? But I'm not 100% sure. Yes, the payment ID is a one time unique identifier for each transaction if it is used.

Your transactions mix every time you send, so it is not necessary to generate a new one, but you can if you would like to.

Jaxx is a wallet that you can download for your mobile device. Keys are created locally and not from a 3rd party. It will help simplify the use of people storing Monero, especially for mobile since the only option right now is to run your node on a vps. There's been hints Jaxx will release support for it in a few days.

I would. Come the release of Jaxx's XMR wallet and RingCT the price will go up. That along with our efforts over on reddit and stack exchange to get the word out on baidu, we should see a nice increase in the coming year.

I use mymonero but plan on switching to Jaxx when it comes out. The GUI has been a bit buggy for some people so I'm holding off on it.

I agree with you on this. The development times are long, and their technology seems more fit for the world several years ago. How much do you have in it so far?

May be justified, but when getting coins is so easy, its hard to imagine them having a high value. If they put a limit of like 50M coins and they halved rewards every X years like Bitcoin, id be much more comfortable. Maybe getting rewards will be difficult when their system is ready, right now all I know is people are given MAID for providing storage for the network. How much MAID is given per X GB offered I think will be the major determining factor for MAID's price

Not really sure if their technology is in the past. The thing I like about it is when people start hosting social media sites, games, VOIP services using the SAFE network, the MAID value will really go up. Right now I have 50K MAID but definitely will be getting more. At the very least it has a lot of potential. I hope they rethink their economy system a bit though Browse reddit.com/r/Monero for a fix.

You should be safe from hackers accessing the wallet since the keys are created client sided I believe. 99% sure I read that somewhere by the developer.

I have a question that has probably been answered a million times but i want people who have invested to give their opinions - what makes monero better than bitcoin? I mean overall in almost every sense btc is a better crypto at least in my eyes. It also can be very discreet and completely anonymous just look at the darknetmarkets. I see some say its even more anonymous than btc but i dont understand how and even then is it really? I feel like any rise monero experiences is because its riding the curtails of the btc rise

Multiple things, It one of the only crypto's that is very well made and by a great team. Since china is trying to go paperless on currency there is rumors that they may use XMR which is gonna make it explode. Its not really that its better than bitcoins per say its more or less that it has the potential to one day become big enough to take it over. Its such a good currency that its getting support for jaxx which is a mobile wallet and that's been rumored to drop on the 9th which is gonna cause a rise in price. (someone correct me if im wrong). To be honest the whole anonymity aspect is kinda a blur to me so im not sure but it is simply untraceable like any other crypto im just not sure how it differs in that sense from bitcoins or any other coin for that matter.

Bitcoin is not completely anonymous. Plus there are multimillion dollar companies trying to de-anonymize bitcoin. It's easy to trace. Monero isn't easy to trace with built in mixing and other security additions.

Monero, itself, is private and untraceable. Everything outside of monero is not. Which is the same with cash. Cash itself is private. However, the pawn shop that gave you cash for that guitar knows that you were the dude that sold the guitar for cash. The trust relationship is where it should be - with humans as participants of a transaction. Not the medium of exchange itself.

If bitcoin was used, anyone can use the public database to see what happened. With monero, a lot of external data is needed, and even then, you don't get far. For instance, with the shapeshift example, shapeshift knows - due to their records - that a particular monero address has received a certain amount of monero. Thats the extent of the information gained. But if you go and publish that same address somewhere with your real identity, then someone could connect the two pieces of data.

No...Shapeshift and any other exchange which demands a payment ID is utilizing a function built into Monero Core, by design, to directly look at the Monero blockchain using the payment ID.

XMR is my first ever cryptocurrency investment. But like, there's a ton of factors saying that it will go up.

By the nature of the coin (anonymous is the biggest plus)

I don't see any big sfop happening since. It has stabilized at this price and there are a few things happening since that should raise the price.

That is correct. It was implemented but just needed to be enabled. This is a huge step forward in my opinion.

I put $2500 into it, hopefully it pays off within next few years.

One thing is for sure, if Bitcoin rises again rapidly, that will cause the rise in Monero as well. But ROI for Monero will be much higher.

Completely new at all cryptocurrency. I've been doing a little research into Monero, and after reading this thread, I want to invest. I read about the mymonero wallet. With this hardfork thing right now, is a mymonero wallet still the way to go or is it something else that is better now? Sorry for my ignorance, but what is the difference between the wallet at mymonero and having a gui desktop wallet node running? (or a mobile wallet for that matter?) Is there a security difference?

Where would be a good place to exchange USD for XMR?

Thank you for this thread. I've learned alot reading, but still don't quite have my mind wrapped around everything.

Thanks for all your help.

To get XMR, you would need to get BTC and change it to XMR. You can look at Shapeshift

The GUI wallet is bit buggy based on my personal experience.

I recommend mymonero until a Jaxx releases theirs very soon. The difference between using the GUI is that by using it, you yourself are in 100% control of your money. Using anyone else's wallet you risk using their security measures and that they won't take your money. Mymonero is run by a code developer is trustworthy, but I wouldn't store a huge amount of XMR on it still.

To exchange into USD you can use a exchange like Poloniex or Kraken. Or you can use shapeshift.io to convert XMR into BTC (or any other coin) and vice versa.

Ah, the most asked question about all new cryptocurrencies that get pumped/popular. The answer is always no. There has never been a cryptocurrency that has overtaken Bitcoin so far or come close to it's value (legitimately; ZEC doesn't count). Furthermore, no cryptocurrency has overtaken Bitcoin in usage - as Bitcoin is still the most used cryptocurrency and the original cryptocurrency.

If you followed my advice at this price you would be up 1000% returns. You're welcome or I'm sorry. well played ?

Seeing as Bithumb already has 2x volume than polo, yes. Very bullish long term.

This is what was expected. First wave was > 200M$, second wave was > 300M$. Third wave is Korea blowing up alongside the rest of the crypto space, expect huge money movement.

Wish I would have seen this thread when you posted it :(I did a bit of reading and I see that mining is still a possibility here. Could it be profitable with just one or two computers?

Not really worth it with 2. Just build a rig with 6.

Didn't get into Monero til a bit late (wasn't too into crypto until about a year ago). Do you think it will take a slight dip before heading on back up or should I go and just pile more money in right now?

thePolarBear - August 28, 2017, 6:58 pm

I tired to buy 10$ worth of monero last weekend but it took ever to send and the fees where $5 dollars. Im waiting for the bitcoin fee go down. :(the site I used only gave me like 11 minutes.

Yeah I wouldn't invest in so little if the fees are going to be around the same you're spending to get actually get XMR or any other currency

I don't really have much hardware building skills. Just thought that I would fire up my computers at home but maybe I can learn a new skill as well.

What is the upkeep time? I hear that ETH mining needs constant babysitting. Is it the same here?

if you look right now XMR is still low obviously you need more money to play with but if you can it's great.

Xmr is still undervalued and will continue to rise. It will be easily top 5 in the next couple of years and is still cheaper than btc, eth, dash, and zcash
