Thread: Should holocaust denial be illegal?

Grand Pootis - December 27, 2016, 7:29 pm

Should saying something that never happened didn't happen be illegal?

Discuss why or why not here.

FunctionDev - December 27, 2016, 7:30 pm

No it shouldn't be illegal. Everyone is free to think what they want and speak what they want... in the US anyway. Now trying to force your thinking onto someone else? That should be illegal.

minimalist - December 27, 2016, 7:31 pm

The fact that speech is free for so many enables people to express their backwards views...just go with the flow.

MazeRunner - December 27, 2016, 7:32 pm

The Palestinian Holocaust?
Or all the other Zionist led coalition's?

I'm having a hard time figuring out if this is a troll or if this guy is actually serious.

B?ker - December 27, 2016, 7:34 pm

No, thats completely unjust that's like not allowing people to believe in another religion or believe 9/11 wasn't setup by the government or Harembree is dead.

?lixir - December 27, 2016, 7:34 pm

No. It shouldn't be illegal to be an asshole.

Code Reck - December 27, 2016, 7:36 pm

I personally believe that nothing you say should allow others be offended. If you really hunk about it, it's just them making a certain sound out of their mouth that somehow offends you. So no, I think that people should be able to say whatever they want to because it's part of having freedom of speech.

BR?ND?N - December 27, 2016, 7:37 pm

Freedom of speech. Let people make asses of themselves.

They created an algorithm to stop the more popular results from showing up. i doubt memes are blockable.. and at least theyre trying

Techius - December 27, 2016, 9:43 pm

No. If you want to start banning holocaust deniers it creates a precedent where anything can be deleted just because it triggers you. Before you know it we're China from pathetic laws like this.

imnotdex - December 27, 2016, 9:48 pm

yea

while we're at it, make being jewish illegal that way, there can be no more holocaust cus no more jews

I don't think it should be illegal, but it should be condemned by other people.

Brendan - December 27, 2016, 11:21 pm

No? We're not trying to control peoples' thoughts. If someone doesn't want to accept that it happened then that's their business.

I don't think they should tbh.

Freedom of information. Granted, Google has the right to not let you search for shit. However I feel like if someone wants to deny a historical fact, so be it.

Bluffer - December 27, 2016, 11:23 pm

No because there needs to be freedom of speech.

It does make them look really unintelligent though!

It's not even possible to make it illegal to deny the holocaust happened lol. There is a right to free speech. (If you're talking about the United States of course)

It's very much possible. Just good luck trying.

?O?? - December 28, 2016, 1:26 am

You have the right of freedom until you interfere with other peoples freedom.

test - December 28, 2016, 1:31 am

Let people think whatever the hell they want to think. If they want to deny something happening regardless of the countless evidence then let them.

I feel like it would be worse to be the historical sponsor of the systemic genocide of millions of people than to be one person saying it (rightfully) did not happen.

To clarify, there was never any "holocaust" in Germany, though.

DutchCoder - December 28, 2016, 2:06 pm

In the netherlands this is illegal, if you say the holocaust is fake you will get arrested

For telling the truth I would get arrested? The holocaust is fake and is only a Jewish media myth. Wow, I would never want to visit that country.

TheMockingBird - December 28, 2016, 2:08 pm

In France we're not allowed to discuss the Holocaust, or else you will be in trial.

Man, i can tell that this is BULLSHIT, it's like fucking North Korea. you can't even talk about it, except from crying.

I believe in the holocaust, but i also believe that some assholes took advantage of the situation in order to turn the holocaust into some kind of religion, and if you don't believe it, and its rules, then you will be rejected, then put in jail.

it is really annoying, at some point, to see some people, like comedians, philosophers and others being harassed by society just because they have a different point of view about the holocaust, and also zionism.

i'm not staying here anyway, this country is a fucking pain in the ass, and i never liked it.

SecuroServ - December 28, 2016, 2:09 pm

If you do say the holocaust never happened in Belgium in public, that would be illegal, but discussing it with a friend is not (the government couldn't check it anyways)

It is just a little thing that takes away a little of your freedom and freedom is key for me.

So no it shouldn't be illegal, if you think that what you think is true then yes you should be able to go ahead and say it, no matter what it is.

I am very sorry to hear this. You're under a country run by Jews who want to make you confirm to their pro-Hasidic desires. DO NOT GIVE INTO IT.

yeah man, that's fucking unbelievable how the zionist assholes took control of the whole country.

our prime minister said one or two years ago that he is "eternally faithful to Israel" and all he did was fighting against what they call antisemitism...

It's fucking outrageous. the whole thing is a lie.

xJPM - December 28, 2016, 2:21 pm

The holocaust - sad, but necessary.

totenkopf - December 28, 2016, 2:26 pm

A lot of holocaust claims have been refuted because of free speech challenging it, so absolutely not. It's progressed from 20 million down to 2.3-3 million. The claims that Jews were turned into soap, furniture, and other commodities were also proven false.

Why should our ability to challenge history be impeded upon and made illegal? Why do you want people to police thought and ideology?

It's universally accepted that the victors write history. We are constantly learning new things about the USSR and their genocides that rival the Nazis, and this is all fairly recent too. It's idiotic to blindly accept what you've been told- and threatened with persecution if you want to challenge these claims.
