maybe most of you would be agree with the fact that color palette is base of design here is I create a control in GDI that makes life much easier

Here is a shoot of it

Spoiler \(Click to View\)<https://i.imgur.com/90vMaZS.png>

it shows HTML and RGB color of every 5 colors

Properties Available

as you see everything is customizable

you can save color palette as image just set 'Savable' property to true

and it works when you clicked the palette

VB.NET

It's a nice looking control but what purpose does it serve?

I understand that but what literal purpose does it serve? Why would I use this over sites like

<https://coolors.co/app>

<https://color.adobe.com>

<http://paletton.com/>

and the many more you can get from a simple google search? I understand it's a control but quite literally how would I go about purposing this control?

and btw : I have worked with photoshop and I have done gfx design and I have worked with GDI check my threads m8.

I think he meant to have this control more to function has a "module control" that would have been used in applications such has: photoshop, Drawing apps, Lighting apps, etc. Either way, it's a nice little control he made, the functionality, code, purpose, etc is there. Glad you shared it, but both of you don't need to roast your fellow gdi+ mates. Roast some turkey instead (° ? °) mate you're free to use it or not I didn't force anyone to do that, I just made this programmatically, and you can google search any time you want.

I personally love this. I haven't taken a look at the code but it's definitely another bookmarked page.
Appreciate your contribution!
