A frat in 1993 vandalized it to say "Go UCLA" 20 frat members were charged with trespassing. That incident is what made the state finally pay for a video surv and motion detection system.

How does this even happen... You would think that someone would've caught this prankster mid-act.

He was filmed on security-camera footage but police can't tell his race or height because it was dark and raining. So I'm guessing he wasn't caught

What a legend

IWrath - January 2, 2017, 9:49 am

It would be better if someone just wiped LA off the map so nobody would care about worthless stuff anymore.

Naw, just an opinion. Less time worrying about the Hollywood sign and what the Kardashians had for dinner and more time spent focusing on something that actually matters.

Bryent - January 2, 2017, 10:47 am

That's awesome, props to whoever did that :)

Vestax101 - January 2, 2017, 11:20 am

Has it been took down yet? that is the question, this shit really been up for 2 days now ?

?ystem - January 2, 2017, 11:23 am

I have to admit that this is relatively funny. Although I'm perplexed on how the vandals got away with it considering the amount of cameras surrounding the sign itself. If they legitimately get away with it "bravo!".

No it's been fixed

ZuGgY - January 2, 2017, 1:43 pm

Just fucking legalize it nationally...

But seriously, this is golden.

Jack Bauer - January 2, 2017, 4:52 pm

You're a writer, you should know better. It was hardly vandalized. All they did was put couple of flags and a white board. That's hardly vandalizing.

Tid?es - January 2, 2017, 4:53 pm

I like how they needed an entire "crew" to fix this. I also like how they called it "vandalism" when it was pretty much a few rags hung from letters lmao.
