The only open sourced silent miners are heavily detected and run on old coins such as Btc which are beyond useless. All the profitable coins are running different algorithms and so it's not easy converting old silent Btc miners, which is why this one was started from scratch.

It only needs NET 2 and idk about the runtime rate. You can configure your AV to whitelist it though.

The builder lets you make your own .exes and edit the code.

Its time to mine zCash, its very profitable!

1.I have installed net3.5 when i run EXE and it prompts you to install net 4.0,I install done.When I run exe,Running is successful,I wait for a long time,But I found my CPU did not have any reaction,I dont know why?

2.Where can I see the efficiency? Can I give me a swimming pool site?

3.If the PC is not idle,It will use how much thread to mine?

I hope to be Active status, can use CPU 30% -50%, idle state is 100%

If you can customize, I can continue to pay it, because now miner is not the result I want

I am waiting for your reply, thanks

Effexion - July 24, 2017, 4:56 pm

Depends on what currency you want, XMR is fairly stable so I'd say go for Monero

A miner uses system resources to generate Zcash, which you can sell for money.

Check: Crypto currencies.
