Thread: Should I drop out or stay in school for the fifth year

Capo™ - January 11, 2017, 8:20 pm

This is a question that has been passing over my mind lately a lot. If I were to drop out I would get my GED. I want to know what you guys think I should do...

ZuGgY - January 11, 2017, 8:30 pm

Definitely stay and finish your education. If you honestly don't think you can do it, then just go for your GED. It's always up to you at the end.

Some times dropping out is the right answer. Many reasons people dont finish school.

Tell us more about yourself OP, what would be your reason of not going back?

Dont drop out man. People dont NEED education to be succesfull, yea alot didnt finish high school and made it good. I dropped out softmore highschool, Am 22 turning 23, still no GED. But forget my story, just stick with it for now and even if it may not be usefull or needed its better than NEEDING it and struggling to get it.

Not saying YOULL need it, but its more of like a safe thinkiing that most people that the age of dropping out arent clear enough to see things this way.

Thats what i think also what i was told when i dropped out. I remember everytime someone tried to convice me not to drop out and listened and said thank you. But in my head im thinking they have no idea who i am. Im different.

And everyone is different but for my own experience i was wrong.

I would say stay for the fifth year but do what you want to do. High school isn't for everyone.

Grand Pootis - January 11, 2017, 8:34 pm

If you drop out then find a way for the state to pay for online school.

Even retarded people now have high school diploma and associate's degrees. Private GED is expensive as fuck and it's not like you'll be able to afford it.

Christ, are you sure you didn't need that education?

To be honest I probably can afford it lol

Fifth year? Where do you live I'm pretty sure high school is only 4 years.

Pay for it and not be able to work full time or take forever to get it.

Then your min wage job gets automated, but you're already living paycheck to paycheck, and it would take 4 years just to get the bachelor's after that. I'm assuming you don't have mommy and daddy money.

It's a lot harder to get back on the education train than it is to keep going.

The people who get their GED are (most of the time) quitters.
They say it's a high school diploma equivalent, but it's not in the real world.

No i do believe i lack alot of social skills because of my choice made. Also i dont wish i stayed longer than i did at least enough for me to be able to speak with the words that are meant and not come off sounding like a... lol - how i speak here but regardless. Im trying to say is this is a prime example of what i neglected when i decided to dropout

Zoey - January 12, 2017, 5:52 am

It may be worth your time staying on and getting more opportunities via education?

Camf ? - January 12, 2017, 5:58 am

Finishing your mandate education is the first test of, "Can you, and will you finish what you started"

Me personally, I got kicked out when I was 17 between jobs so I had no income, no place, and no means of transportation.

I registered with an alternative school that I walked 10 miles to for a week. I expedited my classes, still graduating with my diploma.

I graduated with my diploma before all of my class, I got a job, and signed the lease on my first place the day I turned 18.

Whatever reason you're wanting to quit, just bust it out man! your almost through. It's nothing compared to the real life struggles that fly at you 100 mph.

Portugal - January 12, 2017, 1:06 pm

You should just finish high school.

If there is no urgent reason as to why you need to drop out, then don't do it.

OG_Breezy - January 12, 2017, 1:11 pm

5 years? I'm assuming you have to retake a year for whatever reason...

Anyways don't drop out. Stick through it OP

Capo™ - January 15, 2017, 1:46 pm

Ight I'll stay in fuckin school

Confound - January 15, 2017, 5:36 pm

Try to finish it man. Getting a proper education with degrees is always better in the long run. You're allowing yourself for more opportunities in the future. It's just 1 year of your life, and it can make all the difference.

dez.py - January 16, 2017, 3:03 am stay in school brother, don't be like me i dropped out when i was 8 and i thought i had my shit together with being a parent but i didn't, losing the first child was the hardest but looking back on it now im glad it happened i met the love of my life, me and her thinking about doing a college degree but that was 35 years ago.

All in all i think it's a good idea, have some people over, some friends, some family and talk about it. don't let the pressure of not doing it get you down, walking through that door a brand new man! let your heart tell you what you want, NOT the other way around.

as a final thought on the situation here i think that it's the best that it's got at this point.

- chippy d

You've already spent 4 years, might as well put in the additional year to finish it properly.

[illegible]

TBH if you see yourself in college, get your GED and go straight into college. You'll honestly be 1 year ahead, or if it'd be your 5th year then you'll be on time. I mean you'll have a degree so a diploma won't matter lmao.

Stay in bro. It can make a big difference down the line and keeps multiple different doors open. It's honestly well worth it.

Stay and finish your education. It is definitely worth the investment. It will be easier to get a job and justify asking for salary increases with a degree. Finish it now and if you have debt you can work to pay it off later.

Don't drop out its a lot harder to get back into college vs just riding it out keep going!

You should absolutely not drop out. Education is very important and will take you far in life. As many people may tell you that schooling is the truth and will pay off in the future. Do me a favor and do not drop out. It will all pay off at the end my friend.
